

THE LIBRARY EDITION OF
The Arabian Nights' Entertainments ILLUSTRATED

VOLUME III

للابرار كل شى بر

"TO THE PURE ALL THINGS ARE PURE"

(Paria omnia pura).

—Arab Proverb

"Niuna corrotta monte intese mai sanamente parole."

—"Decameron"—conclusion

"Erubuit, posuitque meum Lucretia librum

Sed coram Bruto. Brute! recedo, legot."

—Matth.

"Mieux est de ris que de larmes escripre,

Pour ce que rire est le propre des hommes."

—RABELAIS.

"The pleasure we derive from porusing the Thousand-and-One Stories makes us regret that we possess only a comparatively small part of these truly enchanting fictions."

—CRICHTON'S "History of Arabia."

The Book of the Thousand Nights and a Night

TRANSLATED FROM THE ARABIC BY CAPTAIN SIR R. F. BURTON
K.C.M.G. F.R.G.S. &c. &c. &c.

REPRINTED FROM THE ORIGINAL EDITION AND EDITED BY LEONARD C. SMITHERS

ILLUSTRATED BY A SERIES OF SEVENTY-ONE ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS
REPRODUCED FROM THE ORIGINAL PICTURES IN OILS SPECIALLY PAINTED BY

ALBERT LETCHFORD

IN TWELVE VOLUMES—VOLUME III

H. S. NICHOLS LTD.
39 CHARING CROSS ROAD LONDON W.C.

MDCCCXCVII

(All rights reserved)

REGISTERED

COPYRIGHTED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES, 1897

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS TO THE THIRD VOLUME.

(LIBRARY EDITION.)

No. 18. TALE OF KAMAR AL-ZAMAN.

"And inside she saw a couch spread, whereon was a human form with the wax-candle burning at his head, and the lanthorn at his feet. . . . Then she folded her wings and stood by the bed and, drawing back the coverlid, discovered Kamar al-Zaman's face" 12

„ 19. TALE OF KAMAR AL-ZAMAN.

"Wherein was a saloon and, behold! in the middle of it there were forty old men, well stricken in years, collected together and forming a single ring as they sat round about a lighted fire to which they were doing worship and prostrating themselves" 106

„ 20. ALA AL-DIN ABU AL-SHAMAT.

"One of the Badawin levelled his javelin and would have plunged it into his breast when he cried out . . . and behold! he saw a hand turn the lance away from his breast" 173

„ 21. ALA AL-DIN ABU AL-SHAMAT.

"And repairing to the Caliph's sitting-saloon planted his scaling ladder and cast his grapnel on to the side of the terrace-roof; then, raising the trap-door, let himself down into the saloon, where he found the eunuchs asleep" 196

Illustrations

No. 22. ALA AL-DIN ABU AL-SHAMAT.

"She drugged a cup with Bhang, and he drank it off and fell upon his back. . . . Ala al-Din went to the King, and finding him lying drugged and helpless, pinioned him fast and manacled and fettered him with chains. . . . Then he wrote a scroll" 216

" 23. ABU MOHAMMED HIGHT LAZYBONES.

"So I mounted on his back, and he flew up with me into the firmament. . . . But as we flew, behold! one clad in green raiment, with streaming tresses and radiant face, holding in his hand a javelin whence flew sparks of fire, accosted me" . . . 294

" 24. ABU MOHAMMED HIGHT LAZYBONES.

"Then I fumigated the vulture with musk, and lo! the Ifrits flocked to me from all sides, saying, 'At thy service'" (frontispiece) 297

" 25. ALI SHAR AND ZUMURRUD.

"They sat down and she took place on her chair of state, watching them. . . . Then they fell to eating" 330

" 26. THE EBONY HORSE.

"The horse forthwith soared with him high in ether, as it were a bird, and gave not over flying till it disappeared. . . . The King . . . was enraged with sore rage . . . and gave himself up to weeping and keening, he and his wife and daughters and all the folk of the city" 419

CONTENTS OF THE THIRD VOLUME.

	PAGE
21. TALE OF KAMAR AL-ZAMAN	I
(Lane—Vol. II., Chapt. x. Story of the Prince Kamar ez-Zaman and the Princess Budur, p. 78 and ibid. p. 149. Story of the Two Princes El-Imjad and El-As'ud, p. 149.)
a. NI'AMAH BIN AL-RABI'A AND NAOMI HIS SLAVE-GIRL	131
(Lane—Chapt. X. Story of Neameh and Naam: p. 186.)
CONCLUSION OF THE TALE OF KAMAR AL-ZAMAN	152
22. ALA AL-DIN ABU AL-SHAMAT	157
(Lane—Chapt. XI. Story of Ala ed-Deen Abu-sh-Shamit: p. 250.)
23. HATIM OF THE TRIBE OF TAYY	219
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XI. Liberality of Hatim el-Tai after his Death: p. 333.)
24. MA'AN THE SON OF ZAIDAH AND THE THREE GIRLS	220
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XI. Anecdote of Maan the Son of Zaidah: p. 335.)
25. MA'AN SON OF ZAIDAH AND THE BADAWI	222
26. THE CITY OF LABTAYT	223
27. THE CALIPH HISHAM AND THE ARAB YOUTH.	225
28. IBRAHIM BIN AL-MAHDI AND THE BARBER-SURGEON	227
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XI. Adventures of Ibrahim the Son of El-Mahdee: p. 336.)

	PAGE
29. THE CITY OF MANY-COLUMNED IRAM AND ABDULJAHJ SON OF ABI KILABAH	236
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XI. The Discovery and History of Irem Zât el-'Emad, the Terrestrial Paradise of Sheddad the Son of 'Ad: p. 342.)
30. ISAAC OF MOSUL	242
(Lane—Note to Chapt. XI. Anecdote of Is-hâk el-Mûsile and Khatejeih and El-Ma-moon: p. 347.)
31. THE SWEEP AND THE NOBLE LADY	247
32. THE MOCK CALIPH	152
(Lane—Chapt. XIII. Story of Mohammad 'Alee the Jeweller, or the False Khaleefeh: p. 380.)
33. ALI THE PERSIAN	270
34. HARUN AL-RASHID AND THE SLAVE-GIRL AND THE IMAM ABU YUSUF	273
35. THE LOVER WHO FEIGNED HIMSELF A THIEF	276
(Lane—Note to Chapt. XIII. Anecdote of a Disinterested Lover: p. 400.)
36. JA'AFAR THE BARMECIDE AND THE BEAN-SELLER	280
(Lane—Note to Chapt. XIII. Anecdote of Ja'far el-Barmakee: p. 404.)
37. ABU MOHAMMED HIGHT LAZYBONES	282
(Lane—Chapt. XIV. Story of Abou Mohammad the Lazy: p. 406.)
38. GENEROUS DEALING OF YAHYA BIN KHALID THE BARMECIDE WITH MANSUR	298
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XIV. Anecdote of Yahya the Son of Khalid el-Barmakee: p. 427.)
39. GENEROUS DEALING OF YAHYA SON OF KHALID WITH A MAN WHO FORGED A LETTER IN HIS NAME	301
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XIV. Another Anecdote of the Same: p. 429.)
40. CALIPH AL-MAAMUN AND THE STRANGE SCHOLAR	304
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XIV. Anecdote of El-Ma-moon and a Learned Man: p. 432.)

41. ALI SHAR AND ZUMURRUD 306
(Lane—Chapt. XV. Story of 'Alee Shér and Zumurrud: p. 434.)
42. THE LOVES OF JUBAYR BIN UMayr AND THE LADY BUDUR 344
(Lane—Chapt. XVI. Story of Ibn Mansoor and the Lady Budur and Jubeyr the Son of 'Omeyr ash-Sheybānee: p. 477.)
43. THE MAN OF AL-YAMAN AND HIS SIX SLAVE GIRLS . . . 360
44. HARUN AL-RASHID AND THE DAMSEL AND ABU NOWAS . . 374
45. THE MAN WHO STOLE THE DISH OF GOLD WHEREIN THE DOG ATE 378
*(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Instances of the Vicissitudes of Fortune:
 p. 497.)*
46. THE SHARPER OF ALEXANDRIA AND THE CHIEF OF POLICE 381
*(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Hosām ed-Deen the Wālees, and a Sharper:
 p. 501.)*
47. AL-MALIK AL-NASIR AND THE THREE CHIEFS OF POLICE . 383
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. The Three Wālees: p. 502.)
- a. STORY OF THE CHIEF OF THE NEW CAIRO POLICE . . . 384
- b. STORY OF THE CHIEF OF THE BULAK POLICE 385
- c. STORY OF THE CHIEF OF THE OLD CAIRO POLICE . . . 387
48. THE THIEF AND THE SHROFF 387
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. The Money Changer and the Sharper: p. 505.)
49. THE CHIEF OF THE KUS POLICE AND THE SHARPER . . . 389
50. IBRAHIM BIN AL-MAIDI AND THE MERCHANT'S SISTER . 390
*(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Anecdote of Ibrāheem the Son of el-Mahdee:
 p. 506.)*
51. THE WOMAN WHOSE HANDS WERE CUT OFF FOR ALMS-GIVING 393
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Anecdote of a Charitable Woman: p. 508.)

Contents.

	PAGE
52. THE DEVOUT ISRAELITE	395
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Anecdote of a Charitable Israelite: p. 510.)
53. ABU HASSAN AL-ZIYADI AND THE KHORASAN MAN . . .	397
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. Anecdote of Abou Hassan ez-Ziyadee: p. 511.)
54. THE POOR MAN AND HIS FRIEND IN NEED	400
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. A Friend in Need: p. 513.)
55. THE RUINED MAN WHO BECAME RICH AGAIN THROUGH A DREAM	401
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. A Dream: p. 514.)
56. CALIPH AL-MUTAWAKKIL AND HIS CONCUBINE MAHBUBAH .	402
(Lane—Notes to Chapt. XVI. El-Mutawakkil and Mahboobeh: p. 515.)
57. WARDAN THE BUTCHER'S ADVENTURE WITH THE LADY AND THE BEAR	404
58. THE KING'S DAUGHTER AND THE APE	408
59. THE EBONY HORSE	415
(Lane—Chapt. XVII. Story of the Magic Horse: pp. 517-545.)

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, as regards the

TALE OF KAMAR AL-ZAMAN,

THAT there was in times of yore and in ages long gone before a King called Shahrimán,¹ who was lord of many troops and guards and officers, and who reigned over certain islands, known as the Khálidán Islands,² on the borders of the land of the Persians. But he was stricken in years and his bones were wasted without having been blessed with a son, albeit he had four wives, daughters of Kings, and threescore concubines, with each of whom he was wont to lie one night in turn.³ This

1 Lane is in error, (vol ii. 78) when he corrects this to "Sháh Zemán"; the name is fanciful and intended to be old Persian, on the "weight" of Káhramán. The Bul. Edit. has by misprint "Shahramán."

2 The "topothesis" is worthy of Shakespeare's day. "Khálidán" is evidently a corruption of "Khálidatáni" (for Khálidát), the Eternal, as Ibn Wardi calls the Fortunate Islands, or Canaries, which owe both their modern names to the classics of Europe. Their present history dates from A.D. 1385, unless we accept the Dieppe-Rouen legend of Labat which would place the discovery in A.D. 1326. I for one thoroughly believe in the priority, on the West African Coast, of the gallant descendants of the Northmen.

3 Four wives are allowed by Moslem law, and for this reason. If you marry one wife she holds herself your equal, answers you, and "gives herself airs"; two are always quarrelling and making a hell of the house; three are "no company," and two of them always combine against the nicest to make her hours bitter. Four are company; they can quarrel and "make it up" amongst themselves, and the husband enjoys comparative peace. But the Moslem is bound by his law to deal equally with the four; each must have her dresses, her establishment, and her night, like her sister wives. The number is taken from the Jews (Arbah Turim Ev. Hazaer, i.), "The wise men have given good advice that a man should not marry more than four wives." Europeans, knowing that Moslem women are cloistered and appear veiled in public, begin with believing them to be mere articles of luxury: and only after long residence they find out that nowhere has the sex so much real liberty and power as in the Moslem East. They can possess property and will it away without the husband's leave; they can absent themselves from the house for a month without his having a right to complain; and they assist in all his counsels for the best of reasons: a man can rely only on his wives and children, being surrounded by rivals who hope to rise by his ruin. As regards political matters the Circassian women of Constantinople really rule the Sultanate, and there soignez la femme! is the first lesson of getting on in the official world.

preyed upon his mind and disquieted him, so that he complained thereof to one of his Wazirs, saying, "Verily I fear lest my kingdom be lost when I die, for that I have no son to succeed me." The Minister answered, "O King, peradventure Allah shall yet bring something to pass; so rely upon the Almighty and be instant in prayer. It is also my counsel that thou spread a banquet and invite to it the poor and needy and let them eat of thy food; and supplicate the Lord to vouchsafe thee a son: perchance there may be among thy guests a righteous soul whose prayers find acceptance and thereby thou shalt win thy wish." So the King rose, made the lesser ablution, and prayed a two-bow prayer¹; then he cried upon Allah with pure intention; after which he called his chief wife to bed and lay with her forthright. By grace of God she conceived and, when her months were accomplished, she bore a male child like the moon on the night of fulness. The King named him Kamar al-Zamán,² and rejoiced in him with extreme joy and bade the city be dressed out in his honour; so they decorated the streets seven days, whilst the drums beat and the messengers bore the glad tidings abroad. Then wet and dry nurses were provided for the boy, and he was reared in splendour and delight until he reached the age of fifteen. He grew up of surpassing beauty and seemlihead and symmetry, and his father loved him so dear that he could not brook to be parted from him day or night. One day he complained to a certain of his ministers anent the excess of his love for his only child, saying, "O thou the Wazir, of a truth I fear for my son, Kamar al-Zaman, the shifts and accidents which befall man, and fain would I marry him in my lifetime." Answered the Wazir, "O king, know thou that marriage is one of the most honourable of moral actions, and thou wouldst indeed do well and right to marry thy son in thy lifetime, ere thou make him Sultan." On this quoth the King, "Hither with my son Kamar al-Zaman"; so he came and bowed his head to the ground in modesty before his sire. "O Kamar al-Zaman," said King Shahríman, "of a truth I desire to marry thee and rejoice in thee during my lifetime." Replied he, "O my father, know that I have no lust to marry nor doth my soul incline to women ;

¹ This two-bow prayer is common on the bride-night; and at all times when issue is desired.

² The older Camaralzaman = "Moon of the age." Kamar is the moon between her third and twenty-sixth day: Hilál during the rest of the month: Badr (plur. Budúr, whence the name of the Princess) is the full moon.

for that concerning their craft and perfidy I have read many books and heard much talk, even as saith the poet:—

Now, an of women ask ye, I reply:— * In their affairs I'm versed a doctor rare!

When man's head grizzles and his money dwindles, * In their affections he hath naught for share.

And another said:—

Rebel against women and so shalt thou serve Allah the more; * The youth who gives women the rein must forfeit all hope to soar.

They'll baulk him when seeking the strange device, Excelsior, * Tho' waste be a thousand of years in the study of science and lore.

And when he had ended his verses he continued, "O my father, wedlock is a thing whereto I will never consent; no, not though I drink the cup of death." When Sultan Shahriman heard these words from his son, light became darkness in his sight and he grieved thereat with great grief—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when King Shahriman heard these words from his son, the light became darkness in his sight, and he grieved over his son's lack of obedience to his directions in the matter of marriage; yet, for the great love he bore him, he was unwilling to repeat his wishes and was not wroth with him, but caressed him and spake him fair, and showed him all manner of kindness such as tendeth to induce affection. All this, and Kamar al-Zaman increased daily in beauty and loveliness and amorous grace; and the King bore with him for a whole year till he became perfect in eloquence and elegant wit. All men were ravished with his charms; and every breeze that blew bore the tidings of his gracious favour; his fair sight was a seduction to the loving and a garden of delight to the longing, for he was honey-sweet of speech and the sheen of his face shamed the full moon; he was a model of symmetry and blandishment and engaging ways; his shape was as the willow-wand or the rattan-cane, and his cheeks might take the place of rose or red anemone. He was, in fine, the pink of perfection, even as the poet hath said of him:—

He came, and cried they, "Now be Allah blest! * Praise Him that clad that soul in so fair vest!"

He's King of Beauty where the beauteous be ; * All are his Ryots,¹ all obey his best :
 His lip-dew's sweeter than the virgin honey : * His teeth are pearls in double row close prest :
 All charms are congregate in him alone, * And deals his loveliness to man unrest.
 Beauty wrote on those cheeks for worlds to see, * " I testify there is none good but He."²

When the year came to an end, the King called his son to him and said, " O my son, wilt thou not hearken to me ? " Whereupon Kamar al-Zaman fell down for respect and shame before his sire and replied, " O my father, how should I not hearken to thee, seeing that Allah commandeth me to obey thee and not gainsay thee ? " Rejoined King Shahrman, " O my son, know that I desire to marry thee and rejoice in thee whilst yet I live, and make thee King over my realm before my death." When the Prince heard his sire pronounce these words he bowed his head awhile, then raised it and said, " O my father, this is a thing which I will never do ; no, not though I drink the cup of death ! I know of a surety that the Almighty hath made obedience to thee a duty in religion ; but, Allah upon thee ! press me not in this matter of marriage, nor fancy that I will ever marry my life long ; for that I have read the books both of the ancients and the moderns, and have come to know all the mischiefs and miseries which have befallen them through women and their endless artifices. And how excellent is the saying of the poet :—

He whom the randy motts entrap * Shall never see deliverance !
 Though build he forts a thousand-fold, * Whose mighty strength leadplates³ enhance,
 Their force shall be of no avail ; *. These fortresses have not a chance !
 Women aye deal in treachery * To far and near o'er earth's expanse ;
 With fingers dipt in Henna-blood * And locks in braids that mad the glance ;
 And eyelids painted o'er with Kohl * They gar us drink of dire mis-chance.

And how excellently saith another :—

Women, for all the chastity they claim, *, Are offal cast by kites where'er they list :

¹ Arab. " Ra'iyá " plur. of " Ra'iyat " our Anglo-Indian Ryot, lit. a liege, a subject ; secondarily a peasant, a Fellah.

² Another audacious parody of the Moslem "testification" to the one God and to Mohammed the Apostle.

³ Showing how long ago forts were armed with metal plates which were have applied to war-ships only of late years.

This night their talk and secret charms are thine ; * That night another joyeth calf and wrist :
Like inn, whence after night thou far'st at dawn, * And lodges other wight thou hast not wist.¹"

Now when King Shahrîman heard these his son's words and learnt the import of his verses and poetical quotations, he made no answer of his excessive love for him, but redoubled in graciousness and kindness to him. He at once broke up the audience and as soon as the séance was over he summoned his Minister and, taking him apart, said to him, "Ho thou the Wazir ! tell me how I shall deal with my son in the matter of marriage ?" —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King summoned his Minister ; and, taking him apart, said to him, "Ho thou the Wazir ! tell me what I shall do with my son in the matter of marriage ? Of a truth I took counsel with thee thereon, and thou didst counsel me to marry him before making him King. I have spoken with him of wedlock time after time and he still gainsaid me ; so do thou, O Wazir, forthright advise me what to do." Answered the Minister, "O King, wait another year, and if after that thou be minded to speak to him on the matter of marriage, speak not to him privily, but address him on a day of state, when all the Emirs and Wazirs are present with the whole of the army standing before thee. And when all are in crowd then send for thy son, Kamar al-Zaman, and summon him ; and when he cometh broach to him the matter of marriage before the Wazirs and Grandees and Officers of state and Captains ; for he will surely be bashful and daunted by their presence and will not dare oppose thy will." Now when King Shahrîman heard his Wazir's words, he rejoiced with exceeding joy, seeing success in the project, and bestowed on him a splendid robe of honour. Then he took patience with his son another year, whilst with every day that passed over him Kamar al-Zaman increased in beauty and loveliness, and elegance and perfect grace, till he was nigh twenty years old. Indeed Allah had clad him in the cloak of comeliness and had crowned him with the crown of completion : his eye-

1 The comparison is abominably true—in the East.

glance was more bewitching than Párút and Márút¹ and the play of his luring looks more misleading than Tághút²; and his cheeks shone like the dawn rosy-red and his eyelashes stormed the keen-edged blade: the whiteness of his brow resembled the moon shining bright, and the blackness of his locks was as the murky night, and his waist was more slender than the gossamer³ and his back parts than two sand-heaps bulkier, making a Babel of the heart within their softness; but his waist complained of the weight of his hips and loins; and his charms ravished all mankind, even as one of the poets saith in these couplets:—

By his eyelash tendril curled, by his slender waist I swear,
By the dart his witchery feathers, fatal hurtling through the air;
By the just roundness of his shape, by his glances bright and keen,
By the swart limning of his locks, and his fair forehead shining keen;
By his eyebrows which deny that she who looks on them should sleep,
Which now commanding, now forbidding, o'er me high dominion keep;
By the roses of his cheek, his face as fresh as myrtle wreath,
His tulip lips, and those pure pearls that hold the places of his teeth;
By his noble form, which rises featly turned in even swell
To where upon his jutting chest two young pomegranates seem to dwell;

By his supple moving hips, his taper waist, and silky skin,
By all he robbed Perfection of, and holds enchained his form within;
By his tongue of steadfastness, his nature true and excellent,
By the greatness of his rank, his noble birth, and high descent,
Musk from my love her savour steals, who musk exhales from every limb,

And all the airs ambergris breathes are but the Zephyr's blow o'er him.
The sun, methinks, the broad bright sun, as low before my love should quail

As would my love himself transcend the paltry paring of his nail⁴!

¹ Two fallen angels who taught men the art of magic. They are mentioned in the Koran (chapt. ii); and the commentators have extensively embroidered the simple text. Popularly they are supposed to be hanging by their feet in a well in the territory of Babel: hence the frequent allusions to "Babylonian sorcery" in Moslem writings; and those who would study the black art at head-quarters are supposed to go there. They are counterparts of the Egyptian Janmes and Mambres, the Jannes and Jambres of St. Paul (2 Tim. iii. 8).

² An idol or idols of the Arabs (Allat and Ozza) before Mohammed (Koran, chapt. ii. 256). Etymologically the word means "error," and the termination is rather Hebraic than Arabic.

³ Arab. "Khayt hamayán" (wandering threads of vanity), or Mukhát al-Shaytan (Satan's snivel)=our "gossamer"=God's summer (Mutter-Gottes Sommer) or God's cymar (?).

⁴ These lines occur in vol. i. night xvii.; so I borrow from Torrens (p. 163) by way of variety.

So King Shahrیمان having accepted the counsel of his Wazir waited for another year and a great festival,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Shahrیمان having accepted the counsel of his Wazir, waited for another year and a great festival, a day of state when the audience-hall was filled with his Emirs and Wazirs and Grandees of his reign and Officers of State and Captains of might and main. There-upon he sent for his son Kamar al-Zaman who came and, kissing the ground before him three times, stood in presence of his sire with his hands behind his back, the right grasping the left.¹ Then said the King to him, "Know, O my son, that I have not sent for thee on this occasion and summoned thee to appear before this assembly, and all these officers of estate here awaiting our orders save and except that I may lay a commandment on thee, wherein do thou not disobey me; and my commandment is that thou marry, for I am minded to wed thee to a King's daughter and rejoice in thee ere I die." When the Prince heard this much from his royal sire he bowed his head ground-wards awhile, then raising it towards his father, and being moved thereto at that time by youthful folly and boyish ignorance, replied, "But for myself I will never marry; no, not though I drink the cup of death! As for thee, thou art great in age and small of wit: hast thou not, twice ere this day and before this occasion, questioned me of the matter of marriage, and I refused my consent? Indeed thou dost and art not fit to govern a flock of sheep!" So saying Kamar al-Zaman unclasped his hands from behind his back and tucked up his sleeves above his elbows before his father, being in a fit of fury; moreover, he added many words to his sire, knowing not what he said in the trouble of his spirits. The King was confounded and ashamed, for that this befell in the presence of his grandees and soldier-officers assembled on a high festival and a state occasion; but presently the majesty of Kingship took him, and he cried out at his son and made him tremble. Then he called to the guards standing before him and said, "Seize him!" So they came forward and laid hands on him and, binding him, brought him before his sire, who bade them pinion his elbows behind his back and in this guise make him stand before the presence. And the Prince bowed down his head for fear and apprehension, and his brow and face were beaded and spangled with sweat; and shame and confusion troubled him sorely. Thereupon his father abused him, and reviled him and cried, "Woe to thee, thou son of adultery and nursling of abomination¹! How durst thou answer me on this wise before my captains and soldiers? But hitherto none hath chastised thee."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ A posture of peculiar submission; contrasting strongly with the attitude afterwards assumed by Prince Charming.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-fourth Night,

She said, it hath reached me, O auspicious King, that King Shahriman cried out to his son Kamar al-Zaman, "How durst thou answer me on this wise before my captains and soldiers? But hitherto none hath chastised thee. Knowest thou not that this deed thou hast done were a disgrace to him had it been done by the meanest of my subjects?" And the King commanded his Mamelukes to loose his elbow-bonds and imprison him in one of the bastions of the citadel. So they took the Prince and thrust him into an old tower, wherein there was a dilapidated saloon and in its middle a ruined well, after having first swept it and cleansed its floor-flags and set therein a couch on which they laid a mattrass, a leathern rug and a cushion; and then they brought a great lanthorn and a wax candle, for that place was dark, even by day. And lastly the Mamelukes led Kamar al-Zaman thither, and stationed an eunuch at the door. And when all this was done, the Prince threw himself on the couch, sad-spirited and heavy-hearted; blaming himself and repenting of his injurious conduct to his father, whenas repentance availed him naught, and saying, "Allah curse marriage and marriageables and married women, the traitresses all! Would I had hearkened to my sire and accepted a wife! Had I so done it had been better for me than this jail." This is how it fared with him; but as regards King Shahriman, he remained seated on his throne all through the day until sundown; then he took the Minister apart and said to him, "Know thou, O Wazir, that thou and thou only wast the cause of all this that hath come to pass between me and my son by the advice thou wast pleased to devise; and so what dost thou counsel me to do now?" Answered he, "O King, leave thy son in limbo for the space of fifteen days: then summon him to thy presence and bid him wed; and assuredly he shall not gainsay thee again." —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ A mere term of vulgar abuse not reflecting on either parent; I have heard a mother call her own son, "Child of adultery."

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Wazir said to King Shahriman, "Leave thy son in limbo for the space of fifteen days; then summon him to thy presence and bid him wed; and assuredly he shall not gainsay thee again." The King accepted the Wazir's opinion and lay down to sleep that night troubled at heart concerning his son; for he loved him with dearest love because he had no other child but this; and it was his wont every night not to sleep, save after placing his arm under his son's neck. So he passed that night in trouble and uncease on the Prince's account, tossing from side to side, as he were laid on coals of Artemisia-wood¹; for he was overcome with doubts and fears, and sleep visited him not all that livelong night; but his eyes ran over with tears and he began repeating:—

While slanderers slumber, longsome is my night; * Suffice thee a heart so sad in parting-plight;

I say, while night in care slow moments by, * "What! no return for thee, fair morning light?"

And the saying of another:—

When saw I Pleiad-stars his glance escape * And Pole-star draught of sleep upon him pour;

And the Bier-daughters² wend in mourning dight, * I knew that morning was for him no more!

Such was the case with King Shahriman; but as regards Kamar al-Zaman, when the night came upon him the eunuch set the lanthorn before him, and lighting the wax-candle placed it in the ¹ Arab. "Ghazá," the Artemisia (Euphorbia?) before noticed. If the word be a misprint for Ghadá it means a kind of Euphorbia which, with the Arák (wild caper-tree) and the Daum-palm (Crucifera thebiaca), is one of the three normal growths of the Arabian desert (Pilgrimage, iii. 22).

² Arab. "Banát al-Na'sh," usually translated daughters of the bier, the three stars which represent the hoises in either Bear, "Charles' Wain," or Ursa Minor, the waggon being supposed to be a bier. "Banát" may also be sons, plur. of Ibn, as the word points to irrational objects. So Job (ix. 9 and xxxviii. 32) refers to U. Major as "Ash" or "Aysh" in the words, "Canst thou guide the bier with its sons?" (erroneously rendered "Arcturus with his sons"). In the text the lines are enigmatical, but apparently refer to a death-parting.

candlestick; then brought him somewhat of food. The Prince ate a little and continually reproached himself for his unseemly treatment of his father, saying to himself, "O my soul! knowest thou not that a son of Adam is the hostage of his tongue, and that a man's tongue is what casteth him into deadly perils?" Then his eyes ran over with tears and he bewailed that which he had done, from anguished vitals and aching heart, repenting him with exceeding repentance of the wrong wherewith he had wronged his father, and repeating:—

Fair youth by stumbling of the tongue shall die: * Stumble of foot works not man's life such wrong:
The slip of lip shall oft smite off the head, * While slip of foot shall never harm one long.

Now when he had made an end of eating, he asked for the where-withal to wash his hands, and when the Mameluke had washed them clean of the remnants of food, he arose and made the Wuzu-ablution and prayed the prayers of sundown and nightfall, conjoining them in one; after which he sat down—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Prince Kamar al-Zaman had prayed (conjoining them in one) the prayers of sundown and nightfall, he sat down on the well-kerb and began reciting the Koran, and he repeated "The Cow," the "House of Imrán" and "Y. S."; The "Compassionate," "Blessed be the King," "Unity," and "The Two Talismans"¹; and he ended with blessing and supplication and with saying, "I seek refuge with Allah from Satan the stoned."² Then he lay down upon his

¹ The chapters are; 2, 3, 36, 55, 67, and the last two ("Daybreak," cxlii. and "Men," cxiv) which are called Al-Mu'izzatáni (vulgar Al-Mu'izzatayn), the "Two Refuge-takings or Preventives," because they obviate enchantment. I have translated the two latter as follows:—

"Say —Refuge I take with the Lord of the Daybreak * from mischief of what he did make * from mischief of moon eclipse-showing * and from mischief of witches on cord-knots blowing * and from mischief of cavier when envying.

"Say:—Refuge I take with the Lord of men * the sovran of men * the God of men * from the Tempter, the Demon * who tempteth in whisper the breasts of men * and from Jinnis and (evil) men."

² The recitations were Náfilah, or superogatory, two short chapters only being required; and the taking refuge was because he slept in a ruin, a noted place in the East for Ghuls as in the West for ghosts.

couch which was covered with a mattrass of satin from Al-Ma'din town, the same on both sides and stuffed with the raw silk of Al-Irak; and under his head was a pillow filled with ostrich-down. And when ready for sleep, he doffed his outer clothes and drew off his bag-trousers and lay down in a shirt of delicate stuff smooth as wax; and he donned a head-kerchief of azure Marázi¹ cloth; and at such time and on this guise Kamar al-Zaman was like the full-orbed moon, when it riseth on its fourteenth night. Then, drawing over his head a coverlet of silk, he fell asleep with the lanthorn burning at his feet and the wax-candle over his head, and he ceased not sleeping through the first third of the night, not knowing what lurked for him in the womb of the Future, and what the Omniscient had decreed for him. Now, as Fate and Fortune would have it, both tower and saloon were old and had been many years deserted; and there was therein a Roman well inhabited by a Jinniyah of the seed of Iblis² the Accursed, by name Maymúnah, daughter of Al-Dimiryát, a renowned King of the Jánn.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the name of the Jinniyah in question was Maymunah, daughter of Al-Dimiryat, a renowned King of the Jánn. And as Kamar al-Zaman continued sleeping till the first third of the night, Maymunah came up out of the Roman well and made for the firmament, thinking to listen by stealth to the converse of the angels; but when she reached the mouth of the well she saw a light shining in the tower, contrary to custom, and, having dwelt

¹ Lane (ii. 222) first read "Múroozee" and referred it to the Muráz tribe near Herat: he afterwards (ii. 748) corrected it to "Marwazee," of the fabric of Marw (Margiana), the place now famed for "Mervousness." As a man of Rayy (Rhages) becomes Rázi (e.g., Ibn Fáris al-Rázi), so a man of Marw is, Marázi, not Murázi nor Márwazi. The "Mikna" was a veil forming a kind of "respirator," defending from flies by day and from mosquitoes, dew, and draughts by night. Easterns are too sensible to sleep with bodies kept warm by bedding, and heads bared to catch every blast. Our grandfathers and grandmothers did well to wear bonnets-de-nuit, however ridiculous they may have looked.

² Iblis, meaning the Despairer, is called in the Koran (chapt. xviii. 48) "One of the genii (Jinnis) who departed from the command of his Lord." Mr. Rodwell (in loco) notes that the Satans and Jinnis represent in the Koran (ii. 32, etc.) the evil principle, and finds an admixture of the Semitic Satans and demons with the "Genii from the Persian (Babylonián?) and Indian (Egyptian?) mythologies."

there many years without seeing the like, she said to herself, "Never have I witnessed aught like this"; and marvelling much at the matter, determined that there must be some cause therefor. So she made towards the light, and found the eunuch sleeping within the door: and inside she saw a couch spread, whereon was a human form with the wax-candle burning at his head, and the lanthorn at his feet, and she wondered to see the light and stole towards it little by little. Then she folded her wings and stood by the bed and, drawing back the coverlid, discovered Kamar al-Zaman's face. She was motionless for a full hour in admiration and wonderment; for the lustre of his visage outshone that of the candle; his face beamed like a pearl with light; his eyelids were languorous like those of the gazelle; the pupils of his eyes were intensely black and brilliant¹; his cheeks were rosy red; his eyebrows were arched like bows, and his breath exhaled a scent of musk, even as saith of him the poet:—

I kissed him: darker grew those pupils,² which * Seduce my soul, and cheeks flushed rosier hue;
O heart, if slanderers dare to deem there be * His like in charms; Say
"Bring him hither, you!"

Now when Maymunah saw him, she pronounced the formula of praise,³ and said, "Blessed be Allah, the best of Creators!" for she was of the true-believing Jinn; and she stood awhile gazing on his face, exclaiming and envying the youth his beauty and loveliness. And she said in herself, "By Allah! I will do no hurt to him nor let any harm him; nay, from all of evil will I ransom him, for this fair face deserveth not but that folk should gaze upon it, and for it praise the Lord. Yet how could his family find it in their hearts to leave him in such desert place where, if one of our Máríds came upon him at this hour, he would assuredly slay him." Then the Ifritah Maymunah bent over him and kissed him between the eyes, and presently drew back the sheet over his face, which she covered up; and after this she spread her wings and soaring into the air flew upwards. And after rising high from the circle of the saloon she ceased not winging her way through air and ascending skywards till she drew near the heaven of this world, the lowest of the heavens. And behold, she heard the noisy flap-

1 Of course she could not see his eyes when they were shut; nor is this mere Eastern inconsequence. The writer means, "had she seen them, they would have showed," etc.

2 The eyes are supposed to grow darker under the influence of wine and sexual passion.

3 To keep off the evil eye.

No. 18.

Tale of Kamar al-Zaman.

“And inside she saw a couch spread, whereon was a human form with the wax-candle burning at his head, and the lanthorn at his feet. . . . Then she folded her wings and stood by the bed and, drawing back the coverlid, discovered Kamar al-Zaman’s face.”

ping of wings cleaving the welkin and, directing herself by the sound, she found when she drew near it that the noise came from an Ifrit called Dahnash. So she swooped down on him like a sparrow-hawk and when he was aware of her and knew her to be Maymunah, the daughter of the King of the Jinn, he feared her and his side-muscles quivered; and he implored her forbearance, saying, "I conjure thee by the Most Great and August Name and by the most noble talisman graven upon the seal-ring of Solomon, entreat me kindly and harm me not!" When she heard these words her heart inclined to him and she said, "Verily, thou conjurest me, O accursed, with a mighty conjuration. Nevertheless, I will not let thee go, till thou tell me whence thou comest at this hour." He replied, "O Princess, know that I come from the uttermost end of China-land and from among the Islands, and I will tell thee of a wonderful thing I have seen this night. If thou find my words true, let me wend my way and write me a patent under thy hand and with thy sign manual that I am thy freedman, so none of the Jinn-hosts, whether of the upper who fly or of the lower who walk the earth, or of those who dive beneath the waters, do me let or hindrance." Rejoined Maymunah, "And what is it thou hast seen this night, O liar, O accursed? Tell me without leasing, and think not to escape from my hand with fables, for I swear to thee by the letters graven upon the bezel of the seal-ring of Solomon David-son (on both of whom be the Peace!), except thy speech be true, I will pluck out thy feathers with mine own hand and strip off thy skin and break thy bones!" Quoth the Ifrit Dahnash son of Shamhûrish¹ the Flyer, "I accept, O my lady, these conditions."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Like Dahnash this is a fanciful P. N., fit only for a Jinni. As a rule the appellatives of Moslem "genii" end in—ûs (oos), as Tarnûs, Hûliyânûs; the Jewish in—nas, as Jattunûs; those of the Tarsâ (the "funkers," i.e., Christians) in—dûs, as Sirdûs; and the Hindus in—tûs, as Naktûs (who entered the service of the Prophet Shays, or Seth, and was converted to the Faith). The King of the Genii is Malik Katshân who inhabits Mount Kaf; and to the west of him lives his son-in-law, Abd al-Rahman, with 33,000 domestics: these names were given by the Apostle Mohammed. "Baktanûs" is lord of three Moslem troops of the wandering Jinns, which number a total of twelve bands and extend from Sind to Europe. The Jinns, Dîvs, Peris ("fairies"), and other pre-Adamic creatures, were governed by seventy-two Sultans all known as Sulayman, and the last I have said was Jân bin Jân. The angel Hâris was sent from Heaven to chastise him, but in the pride of victory he also revolted with his followers the Jinns, whilst the Peris held aloof. When he refused to bow down before Adam he and his chiefs were eternally imprisoned, but the other Jinns are allowed to range over earth as a security for man's obedience. The text gives the three orders, flyers, walkers, and divers.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Dahmash spoke thus to Maymunah, "I accept, O my lady, these conditions." Then he resumed, "Know, O my mistress, that I come to-night from the Islands of the Inland Sea in the parts of China, which are the realms of King Ghayúr, Lord of the Islands and the Seas and the Seven Palaces. There I saw a daughter of his, than whom Allah hath made none fairer in her time: I cannot picture her to thee, for my tongue would fail to describe her with her due of praise; but I will name to thee a somewhat of her charms by way of approach. Now her hair is like the nights of disunion and separation, and her face like the days of union and delectation; and right well hath the poet said, when picturing her:—

She dispread the locks from her head one night, * Showing four-fold nights into one night run;
And she turned her visage towards the moon, * At one time showing the sun and moon.¹

She hath a nose like the edge of the burnished blade and cheeks like purple wine or anemones blood-red: her lips as coral and carnelian shine and the water of her mouth is sweeter than old wine; its taste would quench Hell's fiery pain. Her tongue is moved by wit of high degree and ready repartee: her breast is a seduction to all that see it (glory be to Him who fashioned it and finished it!); and joined thereto are two upper arms smooth and rounded; even as saith of her the poet Al-Walahán²:—

She hath wrists which, did her bangles not contain, * Would run from out her sleeves in silver rain.

She hath breasts like two globes of ivory, from whose brightness the moons borrow light, and a stomach with little waves as it were a figured cloth of the finest Egyptian linen made by the Copts, with creases like folded scrolls, ending in a waist slender past all power of imagination; based upon back parts like a hillock of blown sand, that force her to sit when she would lief stand, and awaken her when she fain would sleep, even as saith of her and describeth her the poet:—

She hath those hips conjoined by thread of waist, * Hips that o'er me and her too tyrannise;

My thoughts are dazed whene'er I think of them, * And weigh her down whene'er she would uprise.

¹ Arab. "Al-Kamaráni." I have adopted the reading proposed by Dr. Steingass.

² i.e. distracted (with love); the Lakab, or poetical name, of apparently a Spanish poet.

And those back parts are upborne by thighs smooth and round and by a calf like a column of pearl, and all this reposeth upon two feet, narrow, slender and pointed like spear-blades,¹ the handiwork of the Protector and Requirer, I wonder how, of their littleness, they can sustain what is above them. But I cut short my praises of her charms fearing lest I be longsome."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Seventy-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Ifrit Dahnash bin Shamhurish said to the Ifritah Maymunah, "Of a truth I cut short my praises fearing lest I be tedious." Now when Maymunah heard the description of that Princess and her beauty and loveliness, she stood silent in astonishment; whereupon Dahnash resumed, "The father of this fair maiden is a mighty King, a fierce Knight, immersed night and day in fray and fight; for whom death hath no fright and the escape of his foe no dread, for that he is a tyrant masterful and a conquerer irresistible, lord of troops and armies and continents and islands and cities and villages, and his name is King Ghayur, Lord of the Islands and of the Seas and of the Seven Palaces. Now he loveth his daughter, the young maiden whom I have described to thee, with dearest love and for affection of her he hath heaped together the treasures of all the kings and built her therewith seven palaces, each of a different fashion; the first of crystal, the second of marble, the third of China steel, the fourth of precious stones and gems of price, the fifth of porcelain and many-hued onyxes and ring-bezels, the sixth of silver and the seventh of Gold. And he hath filled the seven palaces with all sorts of sumptuous furniture, rich silken carpets and hangings, and vessels of gold and silver, and all manner of gear that kings require; and hath bidden his daughter to abide in each by turns for a certain season of the year; and her name is the Princess Budúr.² Now when her beauty became known and her name

¹ The small fine foot is a favourite with Easterns as well as Westerns. Ovid (A.A.) is not ashamed "ad teneros Oscula (not basia or suavia) terre pedes." Ariosto ends the august person in

Il breve, asciutto, e ritondetto piede,

² (The short-sized, clean-cut, roundly-moulded foot).

And all the world over it is a sign of "blood," i.e., the fine nervous temperament.

² i.e. "full moons": the French have corrupted it to "Badoure; we to "Badoura," which is worse.

and fame were bruited abroad in the neighbouring countries, all the kings sent to her father to demand her of him in marriage, and he consulted her on the matter, but she misliked the very word marriage with a manner of abhorrence and said, O my father, I have no mind to marry; no, not at all; for I am a sovereign Lady and a Queen suzerain ruling over men, and I have no desire for a man who shall rule over me. And the more suits she refused, the more her suitors' eagerness increased and all the Royalties of the Inner Islands of China sent presents and rarities to her father with letters asking her in wedlock. So he pressed her again and again with advice on the matter of espousals; but she ever opposed to him refusals, till at last she turned upon him angrily and cried, O my father, if thou name matrimony to me once more, I will go into my chamber and take a sword and fixing its hilt in the ground will set its point to my waist; then I will press upon it, till it come forth from my back, and so slay myself. Now when the King heard these her words, the light became darkness in his sight, and his heart burned for her as with a flame of fire, because he feared lest she should kill herself; and he was filled with perplexity concerning her affair and the Kings her suitors. So he said to her, If thou be determined not to marry, and there be no help for it, abstain from going and coming in and out. Then he placed her in a house and shut her up in a chamber, appointing ten old women as duennas to guard her, and forbade her to go forth to the Seven Palaces; moreover, he made it appear that he was incensed against her, and sent letters to all the Kings, giving them to know that she had been stricken with madness by the Jinns; and it is now a year since she hath thus been secluded." Then continued the Ifrit Dahnash, addressing the Ifritah Maymunah, "And I, O my lady, go to her every night and take my fill of feeding my sight on her face, and I kiss her between the eyes: yet, of my love to her, I do her no hurt, neither touch her, for that her youth is fair and her grace surpassing: every one who seeth her jealousyth himself for her. I conjure thee, therefore, O my lady, to go back with me and look on her beauty and loveliness and stature and perfection of proportion; and after, if thou wilt, chastise me or enslave me; and win to thy will, for it is thine to bid and to forbid." So saying, the Ifrit Dahnash bowed his head towards the earth and drooped his wings downwards; but Maymunah laughed at his words and spat in his face and answered, "What is this girl of whom thou pratest but a potsherd wherewith to wipe after making water? Faugh! Faugh! By Allah, O accursed, I thought thou hadst some wondrous tale to tell me or some marvellous news to give me. How would it be if thou were to sight my beloved? Verily this night I have seen a young man whom, if thou saw though but in a dream, thou wouldst be palsied with admiration and spittle would flow from thy mouth." Asked the Ifrit, "And who and what is this youth?" and she answered, "Know, O Dahnash, that there hath befallen the young man the like of what thou tellest me befell thy mistress; for his father pressed him again and again to marry, but he refused, till at length his sire waxed wroth at being opposed and imprisoned him in the tower where I dwell: and I came up to-night and saw him." Said Dahnash, "O my lady, show me this youth, that I may see if he be indeed handsomer than my mistress, the Princess Budur, or not; for I cannot believe that the like of her liveth in this our age." Rejoined Maymunah, "Thou liest, O accursed, O most ill-omened of Maids and vilest of Satans! Sure am I that the like of my beloved is not in this world."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eightieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Ifritah Maymunah spake thus to the Ifrit Dahnash, "Sure am I that that the like of my beloved is not in this world! Art thou mad to fellow thy beloved with my beloved?" He said, "Allah upon thee, O my lady! go back with thee and look upon my mistress, and after I will return with thee and look upon thy beloved." She answered, "It must needs be so, O accursed, for thou art a knavish devil; but I will not go with thee nor shall thou come with me, save upon condition of a wager which is this. If the lover thou lovest and of whom thou boastest so bravely, prove handsomer than mine whom I mentioned and r It is not generally known to Christians that Satan has a wife called Awwá ("Hawwá" being the Moslem Eve), and, as Adam had three sons, the Tempter has nine, viz., Zu 'l-baysun, who rules in bazars; Wassin, who prevails in times of trouble; Awan, who counsels kings; Haffian, patron of wine-bibbers; Marrah, of musicians and dancers; Masbut, of news-spreaders (and newspapers?); Dulhán, who frequents places of worship and interferes with devotion; Dasim, lord of mansions and dinner tables, who prevents the Faithful saying "Bismillah" and "Inshallah," as commanded in the Koran (xviii. 23); and Lakis, lord of Fire-worshippers (Herklots, chap. xxix. sect. 4). See Lane's "Nights," Introd. Note, 20.

whom I love and of whom I boast, the bet shall be thine against me; but if my beloved prove the handsomer the bet shall be mine against thee." Quoth Dahnash the Ifrit, "O my lady, I accept this thy wager and am satisfied thereat; so come with me to the Islands." Quoth Maymunah; "No! for the abode of my beloved is nearer than the abode of thine: here it is under us; so come down with me to see my beloved, and after we will go look upon thy mistress." "I hear and I obey!" said Dahnash. So they descended to earth and alighted in the saloon which the tower contained; then Maymunah stationed Dahnash beside the bed and, putting out her hand, drew back the silken coverlet from Kamar al-Zaman's face, when it glittered and glistened and shimmered and shone like the rising sun. She gazed at him for a moment, then turning sharply round upon Dahnash said, "Look, O accursed, and be not the basest of madmen; I am a maid, yet my heart he hath waylaid." So Dahnash looked at the Prince and long continued gazing steadfastly on him, then, shaking his head, said to Maymunah, "By Allah, O my lady! thou art excusable; but there is yet another thing to be considered, and this is, that the estate female differeth from the male. By Allah's might, this thy beloved is the likeliest of all created things to my mistress in beauty and loveliness and grace and perfection; and it is as though they were both cast alike in the mould of seemlihead." Now when Maymunah heard these words the light became darkness in her sight, and she dealt him with her wing so fierce a buffet on the head as well-nigh made an end of him. Then quoth she to him, "I conjure thee, by the light of his glorious countenance, go at once, O accursed, and bring hither thy mistress whom thou lovest so fondly and foolishly, and return in haste that we may lay the twain together and look on them both as they lie asleep side by side; so shall it appear to us which be the goodlier and more beautiful of the two. Except thou obey me this very moment, O accursed, I will dart my sparks at thee with my fire and consume thee; yea, in pieces I will rend thee and into the deserts cast thee, that to stay-at-home and wayfarer an example thou be!" Quoth Dahnash, "O my lady, I will do thy behests, for I know forsure that my mistress is the fairer and the sweeter." So saying the Ifrit flew away and Maymunah flew with him to guard him. They were absent awhile and presently returned, bearing the young lady, who was clad in a shift of fine Venetian silk, with a double edging of gold and purpled with the most exquisite of embroidery, having these couplets worked upon the ends of the sleeves :—

Three matters hinder her from visiting us, in fear * Of hate-full, slandering envier and his hired spies :
The shining light of brow, the trinkets' tinkling voice, * And scent of essences that tell whene'er she lies :
Gi'en that she hide her brow with edge of sleeve, and leave * At home her trinketry, how shall her scent disguise ?

And Dahnash and Maymunah stinted not bearing that young lady till they had carried her into the saloon and had laid her beside the youth Kamar al-Zaman.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Ifrit Dahnash and the Ifritah Maymunah stinted not bearing Princess Budur till they descended and laid her on the couch beside Kamar al-Zaman. Then they uncovered both their faces, and they were the likeliest of all folk, each to other, as they were twins, or an only brother and sister ; and indeed they were a seduction to the pious, even as saith of them the poet Al-Mubîn :—

O heart ! be not thy love confined to one, * Lest thou by doting or disdain be undone :
Love all the fair, and thou shalt find with them * If this be lost, to thee that shall be won.

And quoth another :—

Mine eyes beheld two lying on the ground ; * Both had I loved if on these eyne they lay !

So Dahnash and Maymunah gazed on them awhile, and he said, “By Allah, O my lady, it is good ! My mistress is assuredly the fairer.” She replied, “Not so, my beloved is the fairer ; woe to thee, O Dahnash ! Art blind of eye and heart that lean

1 Strong perfumes, such as musk (which we Europeans dislike and suspect), are always insisted upon in Eastern poetry ; and Mohammed's predilection for them is well known. Moreover, the young and the beautiful are held (justly enough) to exhale a natural fragrance which is compared with that of the blessed in Paradise. Hence in the Mu'llakali of Imr al-Kays :—

Breathes the scent of musk when they rise to rove, * As the Zephyr's breath with the flavour o' clove.

It is made evident by dogs and other fine-nosed animals that every human being has his, or her, peculiar scent, which varies according to age and health. Hence animals often detect the approach of death.

from fat thou canst not depart? Wilt thou hide the truth? Dost thou not see his beauty and loveliness and fine stature and symmetry? Out on thee; hear what I purpose to say in praise of my beloved, and if thou be a lover true to her thou dost love, do thou the like for her thou lovest." Then she kissed Kamar al-Zaman again and again between the eyes and improvised this ode:—

How is this? Why should the blamer abuse thee in his pride?
What shall console my heart for thee, that art but slender bough?

A Nature-Kohl'd¹ eye thou hast that witcheth far and wide;
From pure platonic love² thereof deliverance none I trow!

Those glances, fell as plundering Turk, to heart such havoc deal
As never havocked scymitar made keenest at the curve.

On me thou layest load of love the heaviest while I feel
So feeble grown that under weight of chemisette I swerve.

My love for thee as wottest well is habit, and my love
Is nature; to all others false is all the love I tender:

Now were my heart but like to thine I never would say No;
Only my wasted form is like thy waist so gracious-slender:

Out on him who in Beauty's robe for moon-like charms hath fame,
And who is claimed by mouth of men as marvel of his tribe!

"Of man what manner may he be" (ask they who flyte and blame)
"For whom thy heart is so distressed?" I only cry, "Describe!"

Oh, stone-entempered heart of him! learn of his yielding grace
And bending form to show me grace and yielding to consent.

Oh, my Prince Beautiful, thou hast an Overseer in place³
Who irketh me; and eke a Groom whose wrong doth ne'er relent.

Indeed he lieth who hath said that all of loveliness
Was pent in Joseph: in thy charms there's many and many a Joe!

The Genii dread me when I stand and face to face address;
But meeting thee my fluttering heart its shame and fear must show.

I take aversion semblance and I turn from thee in fright,
But more aversion I assume, more love from me dost claim;

That hair of jetty black! That brow e'er raying radiant light!
Those eyne wherein white jostles black!⁴ That darling dainty frame!

¹ Arab. "Kahlá." This has been explained. Mohammed is said to have been born with "Kohl'd eyes."

² Hawá al-'uzri, before noticed (vol. ii. night cxiv.).

³ These lines, with the Názir (eye or steward), the Hájib (Groom of the Chambers or Chamberlain) and Joseph, are also repeated from vol. ii. night cxiv. For the Názir see Al-Hariri (Nos. xiii and xxii.).

⁴ The usual allusion to the Húr (Houris) from "Hawar," the white and black of the eye shining in contrast. The Persian Magi also placed in their Heaven (Bihiisht or Minu) "Huran," or black-eyed nymphs, under the charge of the angel Zamiyád.

When Dahnash heard the poesy which Maymunah spake in praise of her beloved, he joyed with exceeding joy and marvelled with excessive wonderment.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Ifrit Dahnash heard the poesy which Maymunah spake in praise of her beloved, he shook for exceeding joy and said, "Thou hast celebrated thy beloved in song and thou hast indeed done well in praise of him whom thou lovest! And there is no help for it but that I also in my turn do my best to enframe my mistress, and recite somewhat in her honour." Then the Ifrit went up to the lady Budur; and, kissing her between the eyes, looked at Maymunah and at his beloved Princess, and recited the following verses, albeit he had no skill in poesy:—

Love for my fair they chide in angry way; * Unjust for ignorance, yea unjustest they!

Ah, lavish favours on the love-mad, whom * Taste of thy wrath and parting woe shall slay:

In sooth for love I'm wet with railing tears, * That rail mine eyelids blood thou mightest say:

No marvel what I bear for love, 'tis marvel * That any know my "me" while thou'rt away:

Unlawful were our union did I doubt * Thy love, or heart incline to other may.

And eke these words:—

Eyes I feed on their stead by the valley's side, * And I'm slain and my slayer¹ aside hath bled:

Grief wine have I drunken, and down my cheeks * Dance tears to the song of the camel-guide:

For union-blessing I strive though sure, * In Budúr and Su'ád all my bliss shall bide²:

Wot I not which of three gave me most to 'plain, * So hear them numbered ere thou decide:

Those Sworders her eyne, that Lancer her fig- * ure, or ring-mail'd Locks which her forehead hide.

¹ In the first hemistich, "bi-shitt 'il wády" (by the wady-bank): in the second, "wa shatta 'l wády" ("and my slayer"—i.e., wády act. part. of wady, killing—"hath paced away").

² The double entendre is from the proper names Budúr and Su'ád (Beatrice), also meaning "auspicious (or blessed) full moons"

Quoth she (and I ask of her whatso wights * Or abide in towns or in desert ride *)
To me, "In thy heart I dwell; look there!" * Quoth I, "Where's my heart, ah, where? ah, where?"

When Maymunah heard these lines from the Ifrit she said, "Thou hast done well, O Dahnash! But say thou which of the two is the handsomer?" And he answered, "My mistress Budur is handsomer than thy beloved!" Cried Maymunah, "Thou liest, O accursed! Nay, my beloved is more beautiful than thine!" But Dahnash persisted, "Mine is the fairer." And they ceased not to wrangle and challenge each other's words till Maymunah cried out at Dahnash and would have laid violent hands on him; but he humbled himself to her and, softening his speech, said, "Let not the truth be a grief to thee, and cease we this talk, for all we say is to testify in favour of our lovers; rather let each of us withdraw the claim and seek we one who shall judge fairly between us which of the two be fairer; and by his sentence we will abide." "I agree to this," answered she, and smote the earth with her foot, whereupon there came out of it an Ifrit blind of an eye, hump-backed and scurvy-skinned, with eye-orbits slit up and down his face.¹ On his head were seven horns, and four locks of hair fell to his heels; his hands were pitchfork-like and his legs mast-like, and he had nails as the claws of a lion, and feet as the hoofs of the wild ass.² When that Ifrit rose out of the earth and sighted Maymunah, he kissed ground before her and standing with his hands clasped behind him, said, "What is thy will, O my mistress, O daughter of my King?" She replied, "O Kashkash, I would have thee judge between me and this accursed Dahnash." And she made known to him the matter, from first to last, whereupon the Ifrit Kashkash looked at the face of the youth and then at the face of the girl; and saw them lying asleep, embraced, each with an arm under the other's neck, alike in beauty and

1 Arab. "Házir" (also Ahl al-hazar, townsmen) and Bádi, a Badawi, also called "Ahl al-Wabar," people of the camel's hair (tent) and A'aráb (Nomadic) as opposed to Arab (Arab settled or not). They still boast with Ibn Abbas, cousin of Mohammed, that they have kerchiefs (not turbands) for crowns, tents for houses, loops for walls, swords for scarves, and poems for registers or written laws.

2 This is a peculiarity of the Jinn tribe when wearing hideous forms. It is also found in the Hindu Rakshasa.

3 Which, by-the-by, are small and beautifully shaped. The animal is very handy with them, as I learnt by experience when trying to "Rarefy" one at Bayrut.

4 She being daughter of Al-Dimiryát, King of the Janns. Mr. W. F. Kirby has made him the subject of a pretty poem.

loveliness and equal in grace and goodness. The Márid gazed long upon them, marvelling at their seemlihead; and, after carefully observing the twain, he turned to Maymunah and Dahnash, and repeated these couplets:—

Go, visit her thou lovest, and regard not
The words detractors utter; envious churls
Can never favour love. Oh! sure the Merciful Ne'er made a thing more fair to look upon,
Than two fond lovers in each others' arms,
Speaking their passion in a mute embrace.
When heart has turned to heart, the fools would part them.
Strike idly on cold steel. So when thou'st found
One purely, wholly thine, accept her true heart,
And live for her alone. Oh! thou that blamest
The love-struck for their love, give o'er thy talk,
How canst thou minister to a mind diseased? ¹

Then he turned again to Maymunah and Dahnash and said to them, "By Allah! if you will have the truth, I tell you fairly the twain be equal in beauty, and loveliness and perfect grace and goodness, nor can I make any difference between them on account of their being man and woman. But I have another thought, which is that we wake each of them in turn, without the knowledge of the other, and whichever is the more enamoured shall be held inferior in seemlihead and comeliness." Quoth Maymunah, "Right is this recking"; and quoth Dahnash, "I consent to this." Then Dahnash changed himself to the form of a flea and bit Kamar al-Zaman, whereupon he started from sleep in a fright—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Dahnash changed himself to the form of a flea and bit Kamar al-Zaman, who started from sleep in a fright and rubbed the bitten part, his neck, and scratched it hard because of the smart. Then turning sideways, he found lying by him something whose breath was sweeter than musk and whose skin was softer than cream. Hereat marvelled he with great marvel, and he sat up and looked at what lay beside him, when he saw it to be a young lady like

¹ These lines have occurred in vol. i. night xxii. I give Torrens's version (p. 233) by way of variety. In the Mac Edit (i. 832) there is a final couplet which Dr. Steingass would translate:—

O Lord, O Merciful, vouchsafe us union
Before Death's doom; if only for one day!

an union pearl, or a shining sun, or a dome seen from afar on a well-built wall; for she was five feet tall, with a shape like the letter¹ \int , bosomed high and rosy-checked; even as saith of her the poet:—

Four things which ne'er conjoin, unless it be * To storm my vitals and to shed my blood :

Brow white as day and tresses black as night * Checks rosy red and lips which smiles o'erflood.

And also quoth another:—

A Moon she rises, willow-wand she waves, * Breathes Ambergris, and gazes, a Gazelle:

Meseems that sorrow woos my heart and wins, * And when she wendeth hastes theren to dwell!

And when Kamar al-Zaman beheld the lady Budur, daughter of King Ghayur, and her beauty and comeliness, she was sleeping clad in a shift of Venetian silk, without her petticoat-trousers, and wore on her head a kerchief embroidered with gold and set with stones of price; her ears were hung with twin earrings which shone like constellations and round her neck was a collar of union pearls, of size unique, past the competence of any King. When he saw this his reason was confounded, and natural heat began to stir in him; Allah awoke in him the desire of coition, and he said to himself, "Whatso Allah willeth, that shall be, and what He willeth not shall never be!" So saying, he put out his hand and, turning her over, loosed the collar of her chemise; then arose before his sight her bosom, with its breasts like double globes of ivory; whereat his inclination for her redoubled and he desired her with exceeding hot desire. He would have awakened her, but she would not awake, for Dahmash had ¹ Arab "Kámat Alfyyah," like an Alif, the first of the Arabic alphabet, the Heb. Aleph. The Arabs, I have said, took the flag or water-leaf form and departed very far from the Egyptian original (we know from Plutarch that the hieroglyphic abecedarium began with "a"), which was chosen by other imitators, namely, the bull's head; and which in the cursive form, especially the Phœnician, became a yoke. In numerals "Alif" denotes one or one thousand. It inherits the traditional honours of Alpha (as opposed to Omega), and in books, letters, and writings generally, it is placed as a monogram over the "Bismillah," an additional testimony to the Unity. (See vol. i. p. 1.) In mediæval Christianity this place of honour was occupied by the cross; none save the wildest countries have preserved it, but our vocabulary still retains Criss-(Christ)-cross Row, for horn-book, on account of the old alphabet and nine digits disposed in the form of a Latin cross. Hence Tickell ("The Horn-book"); made her sleep heavy ; so he shook her and moved her, saying, "O my beloved, awake and look on me ; I am Kamar al-Zaman." But she awoke not, neither moved her head ; whereupon he considered her case for a long hour, and said to himself, "If I guess aright, this is the damsel to whom my father would have married me, and these three years past I have refused her ; but Inshallah !—God willing—as soon as it is dawn, I will say to him :—Marry me to her, that I may enjoy her " ;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

—Mortals ne'er shall know
More than contained of old the Chris'-cross Row.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman said to himself, "By Allah ! when I see dawn I will say to my sire :—Marry me to her that I may enjoy her ; nor will I let half the day pass ere I possess her and take my fill of her beauty and loveliness." Then he bent over Budur to buss her, whereat the Jinniyah Maymunah trembled and was abashed, and Dahnash, the Ifrit, was like to fly for joy. But, as Kamar al-Zaman was about to kiss her upon the mouth, he was ashamed before Allah, and turned away his head and averted his face, saying to his heart, "Have patience." Then he took thought awhile and said, "I will be patient ; haply my father, when he was wroth with me and sent me to this jail, may have brought my young lady and made her lie by my side to try me with her, and may have charged her not to be readily awakened when I would arouse her, and may have said to her :—Whatever thing Kamar al-Zaman do to thee, make me ware thereof ; or belike my sire standeth hidden in some stead whence (being himself unseen) he can see all I do with this young lady ; and to-morrow he will scold me and cry :—How cometh it that thou sayest, I have no mind to marry ; and yet thou didst kiss and embrace yonder damsel ? So I will withhold myself lest I be ashamed before my sire ; and the right and proper thing to do is not to touch her at this present, nor even to look upon her, except to take from her somewhat which shall serve as a token to me and a memorial of her ; that some sign endure between me and her." Then Kamar al-Zaman raised the young lady's hand and took from her little finger a seal-ring worth an immense amount of money, for that its bezel was a precious jewel and around it were graven these couplets :—

Count not that I your promises forgot, * Despite the length of your delinquencies ;

Be generous, O my lord, to me inclining; * Haply your mouth and cheeks these lips may kiss :

By Allah! ne'er will I relinquish you * Albe you will transgress love's boundaries.

Then Kamar al-Zaman took the seal-ring from the little finger of Queen Budur and set it on his own; then, turning his back to her, went to sleep. When Maymunah the Jinniyah saw this, she was glad and said to Dahnash and Kashkash, "Saw ye how my beloved Kamar al-Zaman bore himself chastely towards this young lady? Verily, this was of the perfection of his good gifts; for observe you twain how he looked on her and noted her beauty and loveliness, and yet embraced her not neither kissed her nor put his hand to her, but turned his back and slept." Answered they, "Even so!" Thereupon Maymunah changed herself into a flea, and entering into the raiment of Budur, the loved of Dahnash, crept up her calf and came upon her thigh and, reaching a place some four carats¹ below her navel, there bit her. Thereupon she opened her eyes and sitting up in bed saw a youth lying beside her and breathing heavily in his sleep, the loveliest of Almighty Allah's creatures, with eyes that put to shame the fairest Houris of Heaven; and a mouth like Solomon's seal, whose water was sweeter to the taste and more efficacious than a thoriack, and lips the colour of coral-stone, and cheeks like the blood-red anemone, even as saith one, describing him in these couplets:—

My mind's withdrawn from Zaynab and Nawâr² * By rosy cheeks that growth of myrtle bear;

I love a fawn, a tunic-vested boy, * And leave the love of bracelet-wearing Fair:

My mate in hall and closet is unlike * Her that I play with, as at home we pair.

Oh thou, who blam'st my flight from Hind and Zaynab, * The cause is clear as dawn uplifting air!

Would'st have me far³ a slave, the thrall of thrall, * Cribbed, pent, confined behind the bar and wall?

Now when Princess Budur saw him, she was seized by a transport of passion and yearning and love-longing,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Kîrât" from κεράτιον, i.e. bean, the seed of the Abrus precatorius, in weight = two to three (English) grains; and in length = one finger-breadth here; 24 being the total. The Moslem system is evidently borrowed from the Roman "as" and "uncia."

² Names of women.

³ Arab. "Amsa" (lit. he passed the evening) like "asbaha" (he rose in the morning), "Azhâ" (he spent the forenoon), and "bâta" (he spent the night), are idiomatically used for "to be in any state, to continue" without specification of time or season.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Princess Budur saw Kamar al-Zaman she was forthwith seized with a transport of passion and yearning and love-longing, and she said to herself, "Alas, my shame! This is a strange youth and I know him not. How cometh he to be lying by my side on one bed?" Then she looked at him a second time and, noting his beauty and loveliness, said, "By Allah! he is indeed a comely youth and my heart¹ is well-nigh torn in sunder with longing for him! But alas! how am I shamed by him! By the Almighty, had I known it was this youth who sought me in marriage of my father, I had not rejected him, but had wived with him and enjoyed his loveliness!" Then she gazed in his face and said, "O my lord and light of mine eyes, awake from sleep and take thy pleasure in my beauty and grace." And she moved him with her hand; but Maymunah the Jinnyah let down sleep upon him as it were a curtain, and pressed heavily on his head with her wings so that Kamar al-Zaman awoke not. Then Princess Budur shook him with her hands and said, "My life on thee, hearken to me; awake and up from thy sleep and look on the narcissus and the tender down thereon, and enjoy the sight of naked waist and navel; and sport with me from this moment till break of day! Allah upon thee, O my lord! sit up and prop thee against the pillow and slumber not!" Still Kamar al-Zaman made her no reply, but breathed hard in his sleep. Continued she, "Alas! Alas! thou art insolent in thy beauty and comeliness and grace and loving looks! But if thou art handsome, so am I handsome; what, then, is this thou dost? Have they taught thee to flout me or hath my father, the wretched old fellow,² made thee swear not to speak to me to-night?" But Kamar al-Zaman opened not his mouth neither awoke, whereat her passion for him redoubled and Allah

¹ Lit. "my liver"; which viscus, and not the heart, is held the seat of passion; a fancy dating from the oldest days. Theocritus says of Hercules, "In his liver Love had fixed a wound" (Idyl. xiii). In the Anthologia, "Cease, Love, to wound my liver and my heart" (lib. vii.). So Horace (Odes, i. 2); his Latin Jecur and the Persian "Jigar" being evident congeners. The idea was long prevalent, and we find in Shakespeare:—

Alas, then Love may be called appetite,
No motion of the liver but the palate.

² A marvellous touch of nature, love ousting affection; the same trait will appear in the lover, and both illustrate the deep Italian saying, "Amor discende, non ascende." The further it goes down the stronger it becomes, as of grand-parent for grand-child and vice versa.

inflamed her heart with love of him. She stole one glance of eyes that cost her a thousand sighs: her heart fluttered and her vitals throbbed and her hands and feet quivered; and she said to Kamar al-Zaman "Talk to me, O my lord! Speak to me, O my friend! Answer me, O my beloved! and tell me thy name, for indeed thou hast ravished my wit." And during all this time he abode drowned in sleep and answered her not a word, and Princess Budur sighed and said, "Alas! Alas! why art thou so proud and self-satisfied?" Then she shook him and, turning his hand over, saw her seal-ring on his little finger, whereat she cried a loud cry, and followed it with a sigh of passion and said, "Alack! Alack! By Allah! thou art my beloved and thou lovest me! Yet thou seemest to turn thee away from me out of coquetry, for all, O my darling, thou camest to me, whilst I was asleep and knew not what thou didst with me, and tookest my seal-ring; and yet I will not pull it off thy finger." So saying, she opened the bosom of his shirt and bent over him and kissed him and put forth her hand to him, seeking somewhat that she might take as a token, but found nothing. Then she thrust her hand into his breast and because of the smoothness of his body, it slipped down to his waist and thence to his navel and thence below, whereupon her heart ached and her vitals quivered and lust was sore upon her, for that the desire of women is fiercer than the desire of men,¹ and she was ashamed of her own shamelessness. Then she plucked his seal-ring from his finger, and put it on her own instead of the ring he had taken, and bussed his inner lips and hands, nor did she leave any part of him unkissed; after which she took him to her breast and embraced him and laying one of her hands under his neck and the other under his arm-pit, nestled close to him and fell asleep by his side—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ This tenet of the universal East is at once fact and unfact. As a generalism, asserting that women's passion is ten times greater than men's (Pilgrimage, ii. 282), it is unfact. The world shows that while women have more philoprogenitiveness, men have more amativeness; otherwise the latter would not propose and would nurse the doll and baby. Fact, however, in low-lying lands, like Persian Mazanderan versus the plateau; Indian Malabar compared with Maráthá-land; California as opposed to Utah, and especially Egypt contrasted with Arabia. In these hot-damp climates the venerable requirements and reproductive powers of the female greatly exceed those of the male; and hence the dissoluteness of morals would be phenomenal, were it not obviated by seclusion, the sabre and the revolver. In cold-dry or hot-dry mountainous lands the reverse is the case; hence polygamy there prevails whilst the low countries require polyandry in either form, legal or illegal i.e. prostitution). I have discussed this curious point of "geographical morality" (for all morality is, like conscience, both geographical and chronological), a subject so interesting to the lawgiver, the student of ethics and the anthropologist, in "The City of the Saints."

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Princess Budur fell asleep by the side of Kamar al-Zaman, after doing that which she did, quoth Maymunah to Dahnash, "Sawst thou, O accursed, how proudly and coquettishly my beloved bore himself, and how hotly and passionately thy mistress showed herself to my dearling? There can be no doubt that my beloved is handsomer than thine; nevertheless I pardon thee." Then she wrote him a document of manumission and turned to Kashkash and said, "Go, help Dahnash to take up his mistress and aid him to carry her back to her own place, for the night waneth apace and there is but little left of it." "I hear and I obey"; answered Kashkash. So the two Ifrits went forward to Princess Budur and upraising her flew away with her; then, bearing her back to her own place, they laid her on her bed, whilst Maymunah abode alone with Kamar al-Zaman, gazing upon him as he slept, till the night was all but spent, when she went her way. As soon as morning morrowed, the Prince awoke from sleep and turned right and left, but found not the maiden by him, and said in his mind, "What is this business? It is as if my father would incline me to marriage with the damsel who was with me and hath now taken her away by stealth, to the intent that my desire for wedlock may redouble." Then he called out to the eunuch who slept at the door, saying, "Woe to thee, O damned one, arise at once!" So the eunuch rose, bemused with sleep, and brought him basin and ewer, whereupon Kamar al-Zaman entered the water-closet and did his need¹; then, coming out, made the Wuzu-ablution and prayed the dawn-prayer, after which he sat telling on his beads the ninety-and-nine names of Almighty Allah. Then he looked up and seeing the eunuch standing in service upon him, said, "Out on thee, O Sawáb! Who was it came hither and took away the young lady from my side, and I still sleeping?" Asked the eunuch, "O my lord, what manner of young lady?" "The young lady who lay with me last night," replied Kamar al-Zaman. The eunuch was startled at his words and said to him, "By Allah! there hath been with thee neither young lady nor other! How should young lady have come in to thee, when I was sleeping in the doorway and the door was locked? By Allah, O my lord! neither male nor female hath come in to thee!" Exclaimed the Prince, "Thou liest, O pestilent slave! is it of thy competence also to hoodwink me and refuse to tell me what is become of the young lady who lay with me last night, and decline to inform me who took her away?" Replied the eunuch (and he was affrighted at him), "By Allah, O my lord! I have seen neither young lady nor young lord!" His words only angered Kamar al-Zaman the more, and he said to him, "O accursed one, my father hath indeed taught thee deceit! Come hither." So the eunuch came up to him, and the Prince took him by the collar and dashed him to the ground; whereupon he brake wind loudly,¹ and Kamar al-Zaman, kneeling upon him, kicked him and throttled him till he fainted away. Then he dragged him forth and tied him to the well-rope, and let him down like a bucket into the well and plunged him into the water, then drew him up and lowered him down again. Now it was hard winter weather, and Kamar al-Zaman ceased not to plunge the eunuch into the water and pull him up again and douse him and haul him whilst he screamed and called for help; and the Prince kept on saying, "By Allah, O damned one, I will not draw thee up out of this well till thou tell me and fully acquaint me with the story of the young lady and who it was took her away whilst I slept."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ This morning evacuation is considered, in the East, a sine quâ non of health; and old Anglo-Indians are unanimous in their opinion of the "bari fajar" (as they mispronounce the dawn-clearance). The natives of India, Hindûs (pagans) and Hindis (Moslems), unlike Europeans, accustom themselves to evacuate twice a day, evening as well as morning. This may, perhaps, partly account for their mildness and effeminacy; for:—

C'est la constipation qui rend l'homme rigoureux.

The English, since the first invasion of cholera, in October, 1831, are a different race from their costive grandparents, who could not dine without a "dinner-pill." Curious to say the clyster is almost unknown to the people of Hindostan, although the barbarous West Africans use it daily. And, as Sonnini notes, to propose the process in Egypt under the Beys might have cost a Frankish medico his life.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman said to the eunuch, "By Allah! I will not draw thee

¹ The Egyptian author cannot refrain from this characteristic polissonnerie; and reading it out is always followed by a roar of laughter. Even serious writers like Al-Hariri do not, as I have noted, despise the indecency

up out of this well until thou tell me the story of the young lady and who it was took her away whilst I slept." Answered the eunuch, after he had seen death staring him in the face, "O my lord, let me go and I will relate to thee the truth and the whole tale." So Kamar al-Zaman pulled him up out of the well, all but dead for suffering, what with cold and the pain of dipping and dousing, drubbing and dread of drowning. He shook like cane in hurricane, his teeth were clenched as by clamp, and his clothes were drenched and his body befouled and torn by the rough sides of the well: briefly, he was in sad case. Now when Kamar al-Zaman saw him in this sorry plight he was concerned for him; but as soon as the eunuch found himself on the floor he said to him, "O my lord, let me go and doff my clothes and wring them out and spread them in the sun to dry, and don others; after which I will return to thee forthwith and tell thee the truth of the matter." Answered the Prince, "O rascal slave! hadst thou not seen death face to face, never hadst thou confessed to fact nor told me a word; but go now and do thy will, and then come back to me at once and tell me the truth." Thereupon the eunuch went out, hardly crediting his escape, and ceased not running, stumbling and rising in his haste, till he came in to King Shahrinan, whom he found sitting at talk with his Wazir anent Kamar al-Zaman's case. The King was saying to the Minister, "I slept not last night for anxiety concerning my son Kamar al-Zaman, and indeed I fear lest some harm befall him in that old tower. What good was there in imprisoning him?" Answered the Wazir, "Have no care for him. By Allah! no harm will befall him! None at all! Leave him in prison for a month till his temper yield and his spirit be broken and he return to his senses." As the two spoke, behold! up rushed the eunuch, in the aforesaid plight, making the King who was troubled at sight of him; and he cried, "O our lord the Sultan! Verily, thy son's wits are fled and he hath gone mad; he hath dealt with me thus and thus, so that I am become as thou seest me, and he kept saying:—A young lady lay with me this night and stole away secretly whilst I slept. Where is she? And he insisteth on my letting him know where she is and on my telling him who took her away. But I have seen neither girl nor boy: the door was locked all through the night, for I slept before it with the key under my head, and I opened to him in the morning with my own hand." When King Shahrinan heard this, he cried out, saying, "Alas, my son!" and he was enraged with sore rage against the Wazir, who had been the cause of all this affair and said to him, "Go up, bring me news of my son and see what hath befallen his mind." So the Wazir rose and, stumbling over his long skirts, in his fear of the King's wrath, hastened with the slave to the tower. Now the sun had risen, and when the Minister came in to Kamar al-Zaman he found him sitting on the couch reciting the Koran; so he saluted him and seated himself by his side, and said to him, "O my lord, this wretched eunuch brought us tidings which troubled and alarmed us and which incensed the King." Asked Kamar al-Zaman, "And what hath he told you of me to trouble my father? In good sooth he hath troubled none but me." Answered the Wazir, "He came to us in fulsome state and told us of thee a thing which Heaven forfend; and the slave added a lie which it becometh not to repeat, Allah preserve thy youth and sound sense and tongue of eloquence, and forbid to come from thee aught of offence!" Quoth the Prince, "O Wazir, and what thing did this pestilent slave say of me?" The Minister replied, "He told us that thy wits had taken leave of thee and thou wouldst have it that a young lady lay with thee last night, and thou wast instant with him to tell thee whither she went and thou diddest torture him to that end." But when Kamar al-Zaman heard these words, he was enraged with sore rage and he said to the Wazir, "'Tis manifest to me in very deed that you people taught the eunuch to do as he did"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Kamar al-Zaman heard the words of the Wazir he was enraged with sore rage and said to him, "'Tis manifest to me in very deed that you people taught the eunuch to do as he did, and forbade him to tell me what became of the young lady who lay with me last night. But thou, O Wazir, art cleverer than the eunuch; so do thou tell me without stay or delay, whither went the young lady who slept on my bosom last night; for it was you who sent her and bade her sleep in my embrace and we lay together till dawn; but when I awoke I found her not. So where is she now?" Said the Wazir, "O my lord Kamar al-Zaman, Allah's name encompass thee about! By the Almighty, we sent none to thee last night, but thou layest alone, with the door locked on thee and the eunuch sleeping before it, nor did there come to thee young lady or any other. Regain thy reason, O my lord, and stablish thy senses and occupy not thy mind with vanities." Rejoined Kamar al-Zaman, who was incensed at his words, "O Wazir, the young lady in question is my beloved, the fair one with the black eyes and rosy cheeks, whom I held in my arms all last night." So the Minister wondered at his words and asked him, "Didst thou see this damsel last night with thine own eyes on wake or in sleep?" Answered Kamar al-Zaman, "O ill-omened old man, dost thou fancy I saw her with my ears? Indeed, I saw her with my very eyes, and awake, and I touched her with my hand, and I watched by her full half the night, feeding my vision on her beauty and loveliness and grace and tempting looks. But you had schooled her and charged her to speak no word to me; so she feigned sleep and I lay by her side till dawn, when I awoke and found her gone." Rejoined the Wazir, "O my lord Kamar al-Zaman, haply thou sawest this in thy sleep; it must have been a delusion of dreams or a deception caused by eating various kinds of food, or a suggestion of the accursed devils." Cried the Prince, "O pestilent old man! wilt thou too make a mock of me and tell me this was haply a delusion of dreams, when that eunuch confessed to the young lady, saying:—At once I will return to thee and tell thee all about her." With these words, he sprang up and rushed at the Wazir and gripped hold of his beard (which was long¹) and after gripping it he twisted his hand in it and haling him off the couch, threw him on the floor. It seemed to the Minister as though his soul departed his body for the violent plucking at his beard; and Kamar al-Zaman ceased not kicking the Wazir and basting his breast and ribs and cuffing him with open hand on the nape of his neck till he had well-nigh beaten him to death. Then said the old man in his mind, "Just as the eunuch-slave saved his life from this lunatic youth by telling him a lie, thus it is even fitter that I do likewise; else he will destroy me. So now for my lie to save myself, he being mad beyond a doubt." Then he turned to Kamar al-Zaman and said, "O my lord, pardon me; for indeed thy father charged me to conceal from thee this affair of the young lady; but now I am weak and weary and wounded with tunding; for I am an old man and lack strength and bottom to endure blows. I have, therefore, a little patience with me and I will tell thee all and acquaint thee with the story of the young woman." When the Prince heard this, he left off drubbing him and said, "Wherefore couldst thou not tell me the tale until after shame and blows? Rise now, unlucky old man that thou art, and tell me her story." Quoth the Wazir, "Say, dost thou ask of the young lady with the fair face and perfect form?" Quoth Kamar al-Zaman, "Even so! Tell me, O Wazir, who it was that led her to me and laid her by my side, and who was it that took her away from me by night; and let me know forthright whither she be gone, that I myself may go to her at once. If my father did this deed to me that he might try me by means of that beautiful girl, with a view to our marriage, I consent to wed her and free myself of this trouble; for he did all these dealings with me only because I refused wedlock. But now I consent, and I say again I consent to matrimony; so tell this to my father, O Wazir, and advise him to marry me to that young lady; for I will have none other and my heart loveth none save her alone. Now rise up at once and haste thee to my sire and counsel him to hurry on our wedding, and bring me his answer within this very hour." Rejoined the Wazir, "'Tis well!" and went forth from him, hardly believing himself out of his hands. Then he set off from the tower, walking and stumbling as he went, for excess of fright and agitation, and he ceased not hurrying till he came in to King Shahrیمان,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ "Long beard and little wits," is a saying throughout the East, where the "Kausaj" (= man with thin, short beard) is looked upon as cunning and tricky. There is a venerable Joe Miller about a schoolmaster who, wishing to singe his long beard short, burnt it off and his face to boot:—which reminded him of the saying. A thick beard is defined as one which wholly conceals the skin; and in ceremonial ablution it must be combed out with the fingers till the water reach the roots. The Sunnat, or practice of the Prophet, was to wear the beard not longer than one hand and two fingers' breadth. In Persian "Kúsch" (thin beard) is an insulting term opposed to "Khush-rish," a well-bearded man. The Iranian growth is perhaps the finest in the world, often extending to the waist; but it gives infinite trouble, requiring, for instance, a bag when travelling. Compare Wallace's account of the beard amongst the Malays (Malay Archæp. chapt. xxxii). The Arab beard is often composed of two tufts on the chin-sides and straggling hairs upon the cheeks; and this is a severe mortification, especially to Shaykhs and elders, who not only look upon the beard as one of man's characteristics, but attach a religious importance to the appendage. Hence the enormity of Kamar al-Zaman's behaviour. The Persian festival of the vernal equinox was called Kúsch-nishin (Thin-beard sitting). An old man with one eye paraded the streets on an ass, with a crow in one hand and a scone and fan in the other, cooling himself, flogging the bystanders, and crying, Heat! heat! (Garmá! garmá!) For other particulars see Richardson (Dissertation, p. lii.). This is the Italian Giorno delle Vecchie, Thursday in Mid-Lent, March 12 (1885), celebrating the death of Winter and the birth of Spring.

Now when it was the Hundred and Eighty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Wazir fared forth from the tower, and ceased not running till he came in to King Shahrman, who said to him as he sighted him, "Ho thou the Wazir, what man hath brought thee to grief and whose mischief hath treated thee in way unlie; how happeneth it that I see thee dumbtounded and coming to me thus astounded?" Replied the Wazir, "O King! I bring thee good news." "And what is it?" quoth Shahrman, and quoth the Wazir, "Know that thy son Kamar al-Zaman's wits are clean gone and that he hath become stark mad." Now when the King heard these words of the Minister, light became darkness in his sight and he said, "O Wazir, make clear to me the nature of his madness." Answered the Wazir, "O my lord, I hear and I obey!" Then he told him that such and such had passed, and acquainted him with all that his son had done; whereupon the King said to him, "Hear, O Wazir, the good tidings which I give thee in return for this thy fair news of my son's insanity; and it shall be the cutting off of thy head and the forfeiture of my favour, O most ill-omened of Wazirs and foulest of Emirs! for I feel that thou hast caused my son's disorder by the wicked advice and the sinister counsel thou hast given me first and last. By Allah! if aught of mischief or madness have befallen my son I will most assuredly nail thee upon the palace-dome and make thee drain the bitterest draught of death!" Then he sprang up and, taking the Wazir with him, fared straight for the tower and entered it. And when Kamar al-Zaman saw the two, he rose to his father in haste from the couch whereon he sat and, kissing his hands, drew back and hung down his head and stood before him with his arms behind him, and thus remained for a full hour. Then he raised his head towards his sire; the tears gushed from his eyes and streamed down his cheeks, and he began repeating:—

"Forgive the sin 'neath which my limbs are trembling,
For the slave seeks for mercy from his master;
I've done a fault which calls for free confession,
Where shall it call for mercy and forgiveness?"

When the King heard this, he arose and embraced his son and, kissing him between the eyes, made him sit by his side on the x I quote Torrens (p. 400) as these lines have occurred in vol. i. night xxxviii.

couch; then he turned to the Wazir and looking on him with eyes of wrath said, "O dog of Wazirs, how didst thou say of my son such-and-such things and make my heart quake for him?" Then he turned to the Prince and said, "O my son, what is to-day called?" He answered, "O my father, this day is the Sabbath, and to-morrow is First day; then come Second day, Third, Fourth, Fifth day, and lastly, Friday.¹" Exclaimed the King, "O my son, O Kamar al-Zaman, praised be Allah for the preservation of thy reason! What is the present month called in our Arabic?" "Zú'l-Ka'dah," answered Kamar al-Zaman, "and it is followed by Zú'l-hijjah; then cometh Muharram, then Safar, then Rabí'a the First and Rabí'a the Second, the two Jamádás, Rajab, Sha'ban, Ramazán and Shawwál." At this the King rejoiced exceedingly and spat in the Wazir's face, saying, "O wicked old man, how canst thou say that my son is mad? And now none is mad but thou." Hereupon the Minister shook his head and would have spoken, but bethought himself to wait awhile and see what might next befall. Then the King said to his child, "O my son, what words be these thou saidest to the eunuch and the Wazir, declaring:—I was sleeping with the fair damsel this night." What damsel is this of whom thou speakest?" Then Kamar al-Zaman laughed at his father's words and replied, "O my father, know that I can bear no more jesting; so add me not another mock or even a single word on the matter, for my temper hath waxed short by that you have done with me. And know, O my father, with assured knowledge, that I consent to marry, but on condition that thou give me to wife her who lay by my side this night; for I am certain it was thou sentest her to me and madest me in love with her and then despatchedst a message to her before the dawn and tookest her away from beside me." Rejoined the King, "The name of Allah encompass thee about, O my son, and be thy wit preserved from witlessness!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninetieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth King Shabriman to his son Kamar al-Zaman, "The name of Allah ¹ Moslems have only two names for week days, Friday, Al-Jum'ah or meeting-day, and Al-Sabt, Sabbath-day, that is Saturday. The others are known by numbers after Quaker fashion with us, the usage of Portugal and Scandinavia.

² Our last night.

encompass thee about, O my son, and be thy wit preserved from witlessness! What thing be this young lady whom thou fanciest I sent to thee last night, and then again that I sent to withdraw her from thee before dawn? By the Lord, O my son, I know nothing of this affair! and Allah upon thee; tell me if it be a delusion of dreaming or a deception caused by indisposition. For verily thou layest down to sleep last night with thy mind occupied apace with marriage and troubled with the talk of it (Allah damn marriage and the hour when I spake of it and curse him who counselled it!) and without doubt or diffidence I can say that being moved in mind by the mention of wedlock thou dreamedst that a handsome young lady embraced thee and didst fancy thou sawest her when awake. But all this, O my son, is but an imbroglio of dreams." Replied Kamar al-Zaman, "Leave this talk and swear to me by Allah, the All-creator, the Omniscient; the Humbler of the tyrant Cæsars and the Destroyer of the Chosroës, that thou knowest naught of the young lady nor of her wonted-place." Quoth the King, "By the Might of Allah Almighty, the God of Moses and Abraham, I know naught of all this and never even heard of it; it is assuredly a delusion of dreams thou hast seen in sleep." Then the Prince replied to his sire, "I will give thee a self-evident proof that it happened to me when on wake."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman said to his sire, "I will give thee a self-evident proof that this happened to me when on wake. Now let me ask thee, did it ever befall any man to dream that he was battling a sore battle and after to awake from sleep and find in his hand a sword-blade besmeared with blood?" Answered the King, "No, by Allah, O my son, this hath never been." Rejoined Kamar al-Zaman, "I will tell thee what happened to me and it was this. Mescemed I awoke from sleep in the middle of the past night and found a girl lying by my side, whose form was like mine and whose favour was as mine. I embraced her and turned her about with my hand and took her seal-ring, which I put on my finger, and she pulled off my ring and put it on hers. Then I went to sleep by her side, but refrained from her for shame of thee, deeming that thou hadst sent her to me, intending to tempt me with her and incline me to marriage, and suspecting thee to be hidden somewhere whence thou couldst see what I did with her. And I was ashamed even to kiss her on the mouth for thy account, thinking over this temptation to wedlock; and, when I awoke at point of day, I found no trace of her, nor could I come at any news of her, and there befell me what thou knowest of with the eunuch and with the Wazir. How, then, can this case have been a dream and a delusion, when the ring is a reality? Save for her ring on my finger I should indeed have deemed it a dream; but here is the ring on my little finger: look at it, O King, and see what is its worth." So saying he handed the ring to his father, who examined it and turned it over, then looked to his son and said, "Verily, there is in this ring some mighty mystery and some strange secret. What befell thee last night with the girl is indeed a hard nut to crack, and I know not how intruded upon us this intruder. None is the cause of all this pother save the Wazir; but, Allah upon thee, O my son, take patience, so haply the Lord may turn to gladness this thy grief and to thy sadness bring complete relief: as quoth one of the poets:—

Haply shall Fortune draw her rein, and bring * Fair chance, for she is changeeful, jealous, vain:
Still I may woo my want and wishes win, * And see on heels of care unfain, the fain.

And now, O my son, I am certified at this hour that thou art not mad; but thy case is a strange one which none can clear up for thee save the Almighty." Cried the Prince, "By Allah, O my father! deal kindly with me and seek out this young lady and hasten her coming to me; else I shall die of woe and of my death shall no one know." Then he betrayed the ardour of his passion; and turned towards his father and repented these two couplets:—

If your promise of personal call prove untrue, * Deign in vision to grant me an interview:
Quoth they, "How can phantom¹ appear to the sight * Of a youth, whose sight is fordone, perdue?"

¹ Arab. "Tayf" = phantom, the nearest approach to our "ghost," that queer remnant of Fetishism imbedded in Christianity; the phantasma, the shade (not the soul), of the dead. Hence the accurate Niebuhr declares, "apparitions (i.e., of the departed) are unknown in Arabia." Haunted houses are there tenanted by Ghuls, Jinns and a host of supernatural creatures, but not by ghosts proper; and a man may live years in Arabia before he ever hears of the "Tayf." With the Hindus it is otherwise (Pilgrimage, iii 144). Yet the ghost, the embodied fear of the dead and of death, is common in a greater or less degree to all peoples; and, as Modern Spiritualism proves, that ghost is not yet laid.

Then after ending his poetry Kamar al-Zaman again turned to his father with submission and despondency, and shedding tears in flood began repeating these lines:—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Kamar al-Zaman had repeated to his father these verses, he wept and complained and groaned from a wounded heart; and added these lines:—

Beware that eye-glance which hath magic might; * Wherever turns those orbs it bars our flight; Nor be deceived by low sweet voice, that breeds * A fever festering in the heart and sprite:
So soft that silky skin, were rose to touch it, * She'd cry, and tear-drops rain for pain and fright:
Did Zephyr e'en in sleep pass o'er her land, * Scented he'd chooso to dwell in scented site:
Her necklets vie with tinkling of her belt; * Her wrists strike either wristlet dumb with spite:
When would her bangles buss those rings in ear, * Upon the lover's eyne high mysteries 'light;
I'm blamed for love of her, nor pardon claim; * Eyes are not profiting which lack foresight; Heaven strip thee, blamer mine! unjust art thou; * Before this fawn must every eye low bow.¹

After which he said, "By Allah, O my father, I cannot endure to be parted from her even for an hour." The King smote hand upon hand and exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! No cunning contrivance can profit us in this affair." Then he took his son by the hand and carried him to the palace, where Kamar al-Zaman lay down on the bed of languor and the King sat at his head, weeping and mourning over him and leaving him not, night or day, till at last the Wazir came in to him and said, "O King of the Age and the time, how long wilt thou remain shut up with thy son and hide thyself from thy troops? Haply the order of thy realm may be deranged by reason of thine absence from thy Grandees and Officers of State. It behoveth the man of understanding,

¹ Mr. Payne (iii. 133) omits the lines, which are à propos de rien and read much like "nonsense verses." I retain them simply because they are in the text.

if he have various wounds in his body, to apply him first to medicine the most dangerous ; so it is my counsel to thee that thou remove thy son from this place to the pavilion which is in the palace overlooking the sea ; and shut thyself up with him there, setting apart in every week two days, Thursday and Monday, for state receptions and progresses and reviews. On these days let thine Emirs and Wazirs and Chamberlains and Viceroy and high Officials and Grandees of the realm, and the rest of the levies and the lieges, have access to thee and submit their affairs to thee ; and do thou their needs and judge among them and give and take with them and bid and forbid. And the rest of the week thou shalt pass with thy son Kamar al-Zaman, and cease not thus doing till Allah shall vouchsafe relief to you twain. Think not, O King, that thou art safe from the shifts of Time and the strokes of Change, which come like a traveller in the night ; for the wise man is ever on his guard and how well saith the poet :—

Thou deemedst well of Time when days went well, * And fearedst not what ills might bring thee Fate :

The Nights so fair and restful cozened thee, * For peaceful Nights bring woes of heavy weight.

Oh, children of mankind whom Time befriends, * Beware of Time's deceits or soon or late¹

When the Sultan heard his Wazir's words he saw that they were right and deemed his counsel wise, and it had effect upon him, for he feared lest the order of the state be deranged ; so he rose at once and bade transport his son from his sick room to the pavilion in the palace overlooking the sea. Now this palace was girt round by the waters and was approached by a causeway twenty cubits wide. It had windows on all sides commanding an ocean-view ; its floor was paved with parti-coloured marbles and its ceiling was painted in the richest pigments and figured with gold and lapis-lazuli. They furnished it for Kamar al-Zaman with splendid upholstery, embroidered rugs and carpets of the richest silk ; and they clothed the walls with choice brocades and hung curtains bespangled with gems of price. In the midst they set him a couch of juniper²-wood inlaid with pearls and jewels, and Kamar al-Zaman sat down thereon, but the excess of his concern and passion for the young lady had wasted his charms and emaciated his body ; he could neither eat nor drink nor sleep ; and he was like a man who had been sick twenty years of sore sickness. His father seated himself at his head, grieving for him with the deepest grief, and every Monday and Thursday he gave his Wazirs and Emirs and Chamberlains and Viceroys and Lords of the realm and levies and the rest of his lieges leave to come up to him in that pavilion. So they entered and did their several service and duties and abode with him till the end of the day, when they went their ways and the King returned to his son in the pavilion, whom he left not night nor day ; and he ceased not doing on this wise for many days and nights. Such was the case with Kamar al-Zaman, son of King Shahrman ; but as regards Princess Budur, daughter of King Ghayur, Lord of the Isles and the Seven Palaces, when the two jinns bore her up and laid her on her bed, she slept till daybreak, when she awoke and sitting upright looked right and left, but saw not the youth who had lain in her bosom. At this her vitals fluttered, her reason fled, and she shrieked a loud shriek which awoke all her slave-girls and nurses and duennas. They flocked in to her ; and the chief of them came forward and asked, "What aileth thee, O my lady?" Answered the Princess, "O wretched old woman, where is my beloved, the handsome youth who lay last night in my bosom? Tell me whither he is gone." Now when the duenna heard this, the light starkened in her sight and she feared from her mischief with sore affright, and said to her, "O my Lady Budur, what unseemly words are these?" Cried the Princess, "Woe to thee, pestilent crone that thou art! I ask thee again where is my beloved, the goodly youth with the shining face and the slender form, the jetty eyes and the joined eyebrows, who lay with me last night from supper-tide until near daybreak?" She rejoined, "By Allah, O my lady! I have seen no young man nor any other. I conjure thee, carry not this unseemly jest too far lest we all lose our lives ; for perhaps the joke may come to thy father's ears, and who shall then deliver us from his hand?"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The first two couplets are the quatrain (or octave) in vol. i. night xxxv.

² Arab, "Ar'ar," the Heb. "Aroer," which Luther and the A. V. translate "heath." The modern Aramaic name is "Lizzâb" (Unexplored Syria, i. 68).

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the duenna bespake the Lady Budur in these words, "Allah upon thee, O my lady! carry not this unseemly jest too far ; for perhaps it may come to thy father's ears, and who shall then deliver us from his hand ? " The Princess rejoined, " In very sooth a youth lay with me last night, one of the fairest-faced of men." Exclaimed the duenna, " Heaven preserve thy reason ! indeed no one lay with thee last night." Thereupon the Princess looked at her hand and, finding Kamar al-Zaman's seal-ring on her finger instead of her own, said to her, " Woe to thee, thou accursed ! thou traitress ! wilt thou lie to me and tell me that none lay with me last night and swear to me a falsehood in the name of the Lord ? " Replied the duenna, " By Allah ! I do not lie to thee nor have I sworn falsely." Then the Princess was incensed by her words and drawing a sword she had by her she smote the old woman with it and slew her¹; whereupon the eunuch and the waiting-women and the concubines cried out at her, and ran to her father, and without stay or delay acquainted him with her case. So the King went to her, and asked her, " O my daughter, what aileth thee ? " and she answered, " O my father, where is the youth who lay with me last night ? " Then her reason fled from her head and she cast her eyes right and left, and rent her raiment even to the skirt. When her sire saw this, he bade the women lay hands on her ; so they seized her and manacled her, then, putting a chain of iron about her neck, made her fast to one of the palace-windows and there left her.² Thus far concerning Princess Budur ; but as regards her father, King Ghayur, the world was straitened upon him when he saw what had befallen his daughter, for that he loved her and her case was not a little grievous to him. So he summoned on it the doctors and astrologers and men skilled in talisman-writing and said to them, " Whoso healeth my daughter of what ill she hath, I will marry him to her and give him half of my kingdom ; but whoso cometh to her and cureth her not, I will strike off his head and hang it over her palace-gate." Accordingly, all who went in to her, but failed to heal her, he beheaded and hung their heads over the palace-gates, till he had decapitated on her account forty doctors and crucified forty astrologers ; wherefore the general held aloof from her, all the physicians having failed to medicine her malady ; and her case was a puzzle to the men of science and the adepts in cabalistic characters. And as her longing and passion redoubled and love and distraction were sore upon her, she poured forth tears and repeated these couplets :—

¹ In the old version and the Bresl. Edit. (iii. 220) the Princess beats the "Kahramānah," but does not kill her.

² This is still the popular Eastern treatment of the insane.

My fondness, O my moon, for thee my foeman is, * And to thy comradeship the nights my thought compel :
In gloom I bide with fire that flames below my ribs, * Whose love I make comparison with heat of Hell :
I'm plagued with sorest stress of pine and ecstasy ; * Nor clearest noontide can that horrid pain dispel.

Then she sighed and repeated these also :—

Salams fro' me to friends in every stead ; * Indeed to all dear friends do I incline :
Salams, but not salams that bid adieu ; * Salams that growth of good for you design :
I love you dear, indeed, nor less your land, * But bide I far from every need of mine !

And when the Lady Budur ceased repeating her poetry, she wept till her eyes waxed sore and her cheeks changed form and hue, and in this condition she continued three years. Now she had a foster-brother, by name Marzawán,¹ who was travelling in far lands and absent from her the whole of this time. He loved her with an exceeding love, passing the love of brothers ; so when he came back he went in to his mother and asked for his sister the Princess Budur. She answered him, "O my son, thy sister hath been smitten with madness, and hath passed these three years with a chain of iron about her neck ; and all the physicians and men of science have failed of healing her." When Marzawán heard these words he said, "I must needs go in to her ; peradventure I may discover what she hath, and be able to medicine her" ; and his mother replied, "Needs must thou visit her, but wait till to-morrow, that I may contrive some thing to suit thy case." Then she went a-foot to the palace of the Lady Budur and accosting the eunuch in charge of the gates made him a present, and said to him, "I have a daughter, who was brought up with thy mistress and since then I married her ; and, when that befell the Princess which befell her, she became troubled and sore concerned, and I desire of thy favour that my daughter may go in to her for an hour and look upon her, and then return whence she came, so shall none know of it." Quoth the eunuch, "This may not be except by night, after the king hath visited his child and gone away ; then come thou and thy daughter." So she kissed the eunuch's hand and returning home waited till the morrow at nightfall ; and when it was time she arose and sought her son

¹ Pers. Marz-bán = Warden of the Marches, Margrave. The foster-brother in the East is held dear as, and often dearer than, kith and kin.

Marzawan and attired him in woman's apparel; then, taking his hand in hers, led him towards the palace, and ceased not walking with him till she came upon the eunuch after the Sultan had ended his visit to the Princess. Now when the eunuch saw her, he rose to her, and said, "Enter, but do not prolong thy stay!" So they went in, and when Marzawan beheld the Lady Budur in the afore-said plight, he saluted her, after his mother had doffed his woman's garb: then he took out of their satchel books he had brought with him; and lighting a wax-candle he began to recite certain conjurations. Thereupon the Princess looked at him and recognising him, said, "O my brother, thou hast been absent on thy travels, and thy news have been cut off from us." He replied, "True! but Allah hath brought me back safe and sound; I am now minded to set out again nor hath aught delayed me but the news I hear of thee; wherefore my heart burned for thee and I came to thee, so haply I may free thee of thy malady." She rejoined, "O my brother, thinkest thou it is madness aileth me?" "Yes," answered he; and she said, "Not so, by Allah! 'tis even as saith the poet:—

Quoth they, "Thou rav'st on him thou lov'st:" quoth I, * "The sweets of love are only for th'insane!"

Love never maketh Time his friend befriend; * Only the Jinn-struck wight such boon can gain:

Well! yes, I'm mad; bring him who madded me * And, if he cure my madness, blame restrain!"

Then she let Marzawan know that she was love-daft, and he said, "Tell me concerning thy tale and what befell thee: haply there may be in my hand something which shall be a means of deliverance for thee."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Marzawan thus addressed Princess Budur, "Tell me concerning thy tale and what befell thee: haply Allah may inspire me with a means of deliverance for thee." Quoth she, "O my brother, hear my story, which is this. One night I awoke from sleep, in the last third of the night¹ and, sitting up, saw by my side the handsomest of

¹

—Quirinus

Post mediam noctem visus, quum somnia vera.

(Horace Sat. i. 10, 33)

The moderns believe most in the dawn-dream.

youths that be, and tongue faileth to describe him, for he was as a willow-wand or an Indian rattan-cane. So methought it was my father who had done on this wise in order thereby to try me, for that he had consulted me concerning wedlock, when the Kings sought me of him to wife, and I had refused. It was this thought withheld me from arousing him, for I feared that if I did aught or embraced him he would peradventure inform my father of my doings. But in the morning I found on my finger his seal-ring in place of my own which he had taken. And, O my brother, my heart was seized with love of him at first sight; and, for the violence of my passion and longing, I have never savoured the taste of sleep and have no occupation save weeping alway and repeating verses night and day. And this, O my brother, is my story and the cause of my madness." Then she poured forth tears and repeated these couplets:—

Now Love hast banished all that bred delight; * With that heart-nibbling fawn my joys took flight:
Lightest of trifles lover's blood to him * Who wastes the vitals of the hapless wight!
For him I'm jealous of my sight and thought; * My heart acts spy upon my thought and sight:
Those long-lashed eyelids rain on me their shafts * Guileful, destroying hearts where'er they light:
Now, while my portion in the world endures, * Shall I behold him ere I quit world-site?
What bear I for his sake I'd hide, but tears * Betray my feelings to the spy's despight.
When near, our union seemeth ever far; * When far, my thoughts to him aye nearest are.

And presently she continued, "See, then, O my brother, how thou mayest aid me in mine affliction." So Marzawan bowed his head ground-wards awhile, wondering and not knowing what to do, then he raised it and said to her, "All thou hast spoken to me I hold to be true, though the case of the young man pass my understanding; but I will go round about all lands and will seek for what may heal thee; haply Allah shall appoint thy healing to be at my hand. Meanwhile, take patience and be not disquieted." Thereupon Marzawan farewelled her, praying that she might be constant and left her repeating these couplets:—

Thine image ever companies my sprite, * For all thou'rt distant from the pilgrim's sight:
But my heart wishes e'er attract thee near: * What is the lightning's speed to Thought's swift flight?

Then go not thou, my very light of eyes" * Which, when thou'rt gone, lack all the Kohl of light.

Then Marzawan returned to his mother's house, where he passed the night. And when the morrow dawned, having equipped himself for his journey, he fared forth and ceased not faring from city to city and from island to island for a whole month, till he came to a town named Al-Tayrab.¹ Here he went about scenting news of the townsfolk, so haply he might light on a cure for the Princess's malady, for in every capitul he entered or passed by, it was reported that Queen Budur, daughter of King Ghayur, had lost her wits. But arriving at Al-Tayrab city, he heard that Kamar al-Zaman, son of King Shahrman, was fallen sick and afflicted with melancholy madness. So Marzawan asked the name of the Prince's capital and they said to him, "It is on the Islands of Khalidan, and it lieth distant from our city a whole month's journey by sea, but by land it is six months' march." So he went down to the sea in a ship which was bound for the Khalidan Isles, and she sailed with a favouring breeze for a whole month till they came in sight of the capital; and there remained for them but to make the land, when, behold! there came out on them a tempestuous wind which carried away the masts and rent the canvas, so that the sails fell into the sea and the ship capsized with all on board.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the ship capsized with all on board each sought his own safety; and as for Marzawan, the set of the sea carried him under the King's palace, wherein was Kamar al-Zaman. And by the decree of Destiny it so happened that this was the day on which King Shahrman gave audience to his Grandees and high officers, and he was sitting, with his son's head on his lap, whilst an eunuch fanned away the flies; and the Prince had not spoken neither had he eaten nor drunk for two days, and he was grown thinner than a spindle.² Now the Wazir was standing respectfully a-foot near the latticed window giving on the sea, and raising his eyes saw Marzawan being beaten by the billows and at his last gasp; whereupon his heart was moved to pity for him, so he drew near to the King and moving his head towards him said, "I crave thy leave, O King, to go down to the court of the pavilion and open the water-gate that I may rescue a man who is at the point of drowning in the sea, and bring him forth of danger into deliverance; peradventure on this account Allah may free thy son from what he hath!" The King replied, "O thou Wazir, enough is that which hath befallen my son through thee and on thine account. Haply, if thou rescue this drowning man, he will come to know our affairs, and look on my son who is in this state and exult over me; but I swear by Allah, that if this half-drowned wretch come hither and learn our condition and look upon my son, and then fare forth and speak of our secrets to any, I will assuredly strike off thy head before his; for thou, O my Minister, art the cause of all that hath betided us, first and last. Now do as thou wilt." Thereupon the Wazir sprang up and, opening the private postern which gave upon the sea, descended to the causeway; then walked on twenty steps and came to the water where he saw Marzawan nigh unto death. So he put out his hand to him and catching him by his hair, drew him ashore in a state of insensibility, with belly full of water and eyes half out of his head. The Wazir waited till he came to himself, when he pulled off his wet clothes and clad him in a fresh suit, covering his head with one of his servant's turbands; after which he said to him, "Know that I have been the means of saving thee from drowning: do not thou requite me by causing my death and thine own."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The Bresl. Edit. (iii. 223) and Galland have "Torf"; Lane (ii. 115), "El-Tarf."

² Arab. "Maghzal"; a more favourite comparison is with a tooth-pick. Both are used by Nizami and Al-Hariri, the most "elegant" of Arab writers.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Wazir did to Marzawan what he did, he thus addressed him, "Know that I have been the cause of saving thee from drowning, so requite me not by causing my death and thine own." Asked Marzawan, "And how so?" and the Wazir answered, "Thou art at this hour about to go up and pass among Eunuchs and Wazirs, all of them silent and none speaking, because of Kamar al-Zaman, the son of the Sultan." Now when Marzawan heard the name of Kamar al-Zaman, he knew that this was he whom he had heard spoken of in sundry cities and of whom he came in search, but he feigned ignorance and asked the Wazir, "And who is Kamar al-Zaman?" Answered the Minister, "He is the son of Sultan Shahrman, and he is sore sick and lieth strown on his couch restless alway, eating not nor drinking neither sleeping night or day; indeed, he is nigh upon death and we have lost hope of his living and are certain that he is dying. Beware lest thou look too long on him, or thou look on any place other than that where thou settest thy feet: else thou art a lost man, and I also." He replied, "Allah upon thee, O Wazir, I implore thee of thy favour acquaint me touching this youth thou describest, what is the cause of the condition in which he is." The Wazir replied, "I know none, save that, three years ago, his father required him to wed, but he refused; whereat the King was wroth and imprisoned him. And when he awoke on the morrow, he fancied that during the night he had been roused from sleep and had seen by his side a young lady of passing loveliness, whose charms tongue can never express; and he assured us that he had plucked off her seal-ring from her finger and had put it on his own, and that she had done likewise; but we know not the secret of all this business. So by Allah, O my son! when thou comest up with me into the palace, look not on the Prince, but go thy way; for the Sultan's heart is full of wrath against me." So said Marzawan to himself, "By Allah! this is the one I sought!" Then he followed the Wazir up to the palace, where the Minister seated himself at the Prince's feet; but Marzawan found, forsooth! nothing to do but go up to Kamar al-Zaman and stand before him at gaze. Upon this the Wazir died of affright in his skin, and kept looking at Marzawan and signalling him to wend his way; but he feigned not to see him and gave not over gazing upon Kamar al-Zaman, till he was well assured that it was indeed he whom he was seeking,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Marzawan looked upon Kamar al-Zaman and knew that it was indeed he whom he was seeking, he cried, "Exalted be Allah, Who hath made his shape even as her shape and his complexion as her complexion and his check as her check!" Upon this Kamar al-Zaman opened his eyes and gave earnest ear to his speech; and, when Marzawan saw him inclining to hear, he repeated these couplets¹ :—

¹ These form a Kasidah, Ode, or Elegy = rhymed couplets numbering more than thirteen: if shorter 't is called a "Ghazal." I have not thought it necessary to preserve the monorhyme.

I see thee full of song and plaint and love's own ecstasy ;
 Delighting in describing all the charms of loveliness :
 Art smit by stroke of Love or hath shaft-shot wounded thee ?
 None save the wounded ever show such signals of distress !
 Ho thou ! crown the wine-cup and sing me singular
 Praises to Sulaymá, Al-Rabáb, Tan'aum address¹ ; Go round the grape-vine sun² which for mansion hath a jar ;
 Whose East the cup-boy is, and here my mouth that opes for West.
 I'm jealous of the very clothes that dare her sides enroll
 When she veils her dainty body of the delicatest grace :
 I envy every goblet of her lips that taketh toll,
 When she sets the kissing-cup on that sweetest kissing-place.
 But deem not by the keen-edged scymitar I'm slain—
 The hurts and harms I dree are from arrows of her eyes.
 I found her finger-tips, as I met her once again,
 Deep-reddened with the juice of the wood that ruddy dyes³ ;
 And cried, " Thy palms thou stainedst when far away was I
 And this is how thou payest one distracted by his pine ! " Quoth she (enkindling heart with a flame that burnèd high Speaking as one who cannot hide of longing love the sign),
 " By thy life, this is no dye used for dyeing ; so forbear Thy blame, nor in charging me with falsing Love persist !
 " But when upon our parting-day I saw thee haste to fare,
 The while were bared by hand and my elbow and my wrist ;
 " I shed a flood of blood-red tears and with fingers brushed away ;
 Hence blood-reddened were the tips and blood-red still they remain."
 Had I wept before she wept, to my longing-love a prey,
 Before repentance came, I had quit my soul of pain ;
 But she wept before I wept, and I wept to see her care,
 And I said, " All the merit appertains to preecedent⁴ ; "
 Blame me not for loving her ; now on self of love I swear
 For her sake, for her only, these pains my soul torment.

1 Sulaymá dim. of Salmá=any beautiful woman : Rabáb=the viol mostly single-stringed : Tan'aum = she who is soft and gentle. These fictitious names are for his old flames.

2 i.e., wine. The distich is highly fanciful and the conceits would hardly occur to a Western.

3 Arab. "Andam," a term applied to Brazil-wood (also called "Bakkam") and to "dragon's blood," but not, I think, to tragacanth, the "goat's thorn," which does not dye. Andam is often mentioned in The Nights.

4 The superior merit of the first (explorer, etc.) is a liu commun with Arabs. So Al-Hariri in Preface quotes his predecessor :—

Justly of praise the price I pay ;
 The praise is his who leads the way.

She hath all the lore of Lukmán¹ and Yúsuf's beauty lief;
Sweet singer David's voice and Maryam's chastity :

While I've all Jacob's mourning and Jonah's prison-grief,
And the sufferings of Job and old Adam's history :

Yet kill her not, albeit of my love for her I die ;
But ask her why my blood to her was lawful, ask her why ?

When Marzawan recited this ode, the words fell upon Kamar al-Zaman's heart as freshness after fever and returning health; and he sighed and turning his tongue in his mouth, said to his sire, "O my father, let this youth come and sit by my side."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman said to his sire, "O my father, allow this youth to come and sit by my side." Now when the King heard these words from his son, he rejoiced with exceeding joy, though at the first his heart had been set against Marzawan, and he had determined that the stranger's head needs must be stricken off: but when he heard Kamar al-Zaman speak, his anger left him and he arose and drawing Marzawan to him seated him by his son, and turning to him said, "Praised be Allah for thy safety!" He replied, "Allah preserve thee! and preserve thy son to thee!" and called down blessings on the King. Then the King asked, "From what country art thou?" and he answered, "From the Islands of the Inland Sea, the kingdom of King Ghayur, Lord of the Isles and the Seas and the Seven Palaces." Quoth King Shahrman, "Maybe thy coming shall be blessed to my son and Allah vouchsafe to heal what is in him." Quoth Marzawan, "Inshallah, naught shall be save what shall be well!" Then turning to Kamar al-Zaman, he said to him in his ear unheard of the King and his court, "O my lord! be of good cheer, and hearten thy heart and let thine eyes be cool and clear, and with respect to her for whose sake thou art thus, ask not of her case on thine account. But thou kepest thy secret and fellest sick, while she told her secret and they said she had gone mad; so she is now in prison, with an iron chain about her neck, in most pitcous plight; but, Allah willing, the healing of both of you shall come from my hand." Now when Kamar al-Zaman heard these words, his life returned to him and he took heart and felt a thrill of joy, and signed to his father to help him sit up; and the King was like to fly for gladness, and rose hastily and lifted him. Presently, of his fear for his son, he shook the kerchief of dismissal¹; and all the Emire and Wazirs withdrew; then he set two pillows for his boy to lean upon, after which he bade them perfume the palace with saffron and decorate the city, saying to Marzawan, "By Allah, O my son! of a truth thine aspect be a lucky and a blessed!" And he made as much of him as he might and called for food, and when they brought it, Marzawan came up to the Prince and said, "Rise, eat with me." So he obeyed him and ate with him, and all the while the King invoked blessings on Marzawan and said, "How auspicious is thy coming, O my son!" And when the father saw his boy eat, his joy and gladness redoubled, and he went out and told the Prince's mother and all the household. Then he spread throughout the palace the good news of the Prince's recovery, and the King commanded the decoration of the city, and it was a day of high festival. Marzawan passed that night with Kamar al-Zaman, and the King also slept with them in joy and delight for his child's recovery.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ There were two Lukmans, or perhaps three, of whom more in a future page.

Now when it was the Hundred and Ninety-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that King Shahrman also passed that night with them in the excess of his joy for his son's recovery. And when the next morning dawned, and the King had gone away and the two young men were left alone, Kamar al-Zaman told his story from beginning to end to Marzawan, who said, "In very sooth I know her with whom thou didst forgather; her name is the Princess Budur and she is daughter to King Ghayur." Then he related to him all that had passed with the Princess from first to last, and acquainted him with the excessive love she bore him, saying, "All that befell thee with thy father hath befallen her with hers, and thou art without doubt her beloved, even as she is thine; so brace up thy resolution and take heart, for I will bring thee to her and unite you both anon and deal with you even as saith the poet:—

¹ This symbolic action is repeatedly mentioned in The Nights.

Albe to lover adverse be his love, * And show aversion howso may he care;

Yet will I manage that their poisons¹ meet, * E'en as the pivot of a scissor-pair."

And he ceased not to comfort and solace and encourage Kamar al-Zaman and urge him to eat and drink till he ate food and drank wine, and life returned to him, and he was saved from his ill case; and Marzawan cheered him and diverted him with talk and songs and stories, and in good time he became free of his disorder and stood up and sought to go to the Hammam.² So Marzawan took him by the hand and both went to the bath, where they washed their bodies and made them clean.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundredth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Kamar al-Zaman, son of King Shahriman, went to the Hammam, his father in his joy at this event freed the prisoners, and presented splendid dresses to his grantees and bestowed large alm-gifts upon the poor and bade decorate the city seven days. Then quoth Marzawan to Kamar al-Zaman, "Know, O my lord, that I came not from the Lady Budur save for this purpose, and the object of my journey was to deliver her from her present case; and it remaineth for us only to devise how we may get to her, since thy father cannot brook the thought of parting from thee. So it is my counsel that to-morrow thou ask his leave to go abroad hunting. Then do thou take with thee a pair of saddle-bags full of money and mount a swift steed and lead a spare horse, and I will do the like, and say to thy sire:—I have a mind to divert myself with hunting the desert and to see the open country, and there to pass one night. Suffer not any servant to follow us, for as soon as we reach the champaign we will go our ways." Kamar al-Zaman rejoiced in this plan with great joy and cried, "It is good." Then he stiffened his back and going in to his father sought his leave and spoke as he had been taught, and the King consented to his going forth

¹ Arab. "Shakhs"=a person, primarily a dark spot. So "Sawād"=blackness, in Al-Hariri means a group of people who darken the ground by their shade.

² The first bath after sickness, I have said, is called "Ghusl al-Sihhab,"—the Washing of Health.

a-hunting and said, "O my son, blessed be the day that restoreth thee to health! I will not gainsay thee in this; but pass not more than one night in the desert and return to me on the morrow; for thou knowest that life is not good to me without thee, and indeed I can hardly believe thee to be wholly recovered from what thou hadst,¹ because thou art to me as he of whom quoth the poet:—

Albe by me I had through day and night * Solomon's carpet and the Chosroës' might,
Both were in value less than wing of gnat, * Unless these eyne could hold thee aye in sight.²

Then the King equipped his son Kamar al-Zaman and Marzawan for the excursion, bidding make ready for them four horses, together with a dromedary to carry the money and a camel to bear the water and belly-timber; and Kamar al-Zaman forbade any of his attendants to follow him. His father farewelled him and pressed him to his breast and kissed him, saying, "I ask thee in the name of Allah, be not absent from me more than one night, wherein sleep will be unlawful to me, for I am even as saith the poet:—

Thou present, in the Heaven of Heavens I dwell; * Bearing thine absence is of Hells my Hell:

Plledged be for thee my soul! If love for thee * Be crime, my crime is of the fellest fell.

Does love-love burn thy heart as burns it mine, * Doomed night and day Jahannah-fire to smell?"

Answered Kamar al-Zaman, "O my father, Inshallah, I will lie abroad but one night!" Then he took leave of him, and he and Marzawan mounted and leading the spare horses, the dromedary with the money and the camel with the water and victual, turned their faces towards the open country;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawning day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and First Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman and Marzawan fared forth and turned their faces

1 The words "malady" and "disease" are mostly avoided during these dialogues as ill-omened words which may bring on a relapse

2 Solomon's carpet of green silk which carried him and all his host through the air is a Talmudic legend generally accepted in Al-Islam though not countenanced by the Koran, chapt. xxvii. When the "gnat's wing" is mentioned, the reference is to Nimrod who, for boasting that he was lord of all, was tortured during four hundred years by a gnat sent by Allah up his ear or nostril.

towards the open country; and they travelled from the first of the day till nightfall, when they halted and ate and drank and fed their beasts and rested awhile; after which they again took horse and ceased not journeying for three days, and on the fourth they came to a spacious tract wherein was a thicket. They alighted in it, and Marzawan taking the camel and one of the horses slaughtered them, and cut off their flesh and stripped their bones. Then he doffed from Kamar al-Zaman his shirt and trousers, which he smeared with the horse's blood, and he took the Prince's coat, which he tore to shreds and befouled with gore; and he cast them down in the fork of the road. Anon they ate and drank, and mounting set forward again; and when Kamar al-Zaman asked why this was done, and said, "What is this, O my brother! and how shall it profit us?" Marzawan replied, "Know that thy father, when we have outstayed the second night after the night for which we had his leave, and yet we return not, will mount and follow in our track till he come hither; and, when he happeneth upon this blood which I have split and he seeth thy shirt and trousers rent and gore-fouled, he will fancy that some accident befell thee from bandits or wild beasts; so he will give up hope of thee and return to his city, and by this device we shall win our wishes." Quoth Kamar al-Zaman, "By Allah, this be indeed a rare device! Thou hast done right well." Then the two fared on days and nights, and all that while Kamar al-Zaman did naught but complain when he found himself alone, and he ceased not weeping till they drew near their journey's end, when he rejoiced and repeated these verses:—

Wilt tyrant play with truest friend who thinks of thee each hour, * And after showing love-desire betray indifference?
 May I forfeit every favour if in love I falsed thee, * If thee I left, abandon me by way of recompense:
 But I've been guilty of no crime such harshness to deserve, * And if I aught offended thee I bring my penitence;
 Of Fortune's wonders one it is thou hast abandoned me; * But Fortune never wearieth of showing wonderments.

When he had made an end of his verses, Marzawan said to him, "Look! these be King Ghayur's Islands"; whereat Kamar al-Zaman joyed with exceeding joy and thanked him for what

1 The absolute want of morality and filial affection in the young man are supposed to be caused by the violence of his passion, and he would be pardoned because he "loved much."

he had done, and kissed him between the eyes and strained him — And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Marzawan said, "Look! these be the Islands of King Ghayur"; Kamar al-Zaman joyed with exceeding joy and thanked him for what he had done, and kissed him between the eyes and strained him to his bosom. And after reaching the Islands and entering the city they took up their lodging in a khan, where they rested three days from the fatigues of their wayfare, after which Marzawan carried Kamar al-Zaman to the bath, and, clothing him in merchant's gear, provided him with a geomantic tablet of gold,¹ with a set of astrological instruments, and with an astrolabe of silver plated with gold. Then he said to him, "Arise, O my lord, and take thy stand under the walls of the King's palace and cry out:—I am the ready Reckoner; I am the Scrivener; I am he who weeth the Sought and the Seeker; I am the finished man of Science; I am the Astrologer accomplished in experience! Where, then, is he that seeketh? As soon as the King heareth this, he will send after thee and carry thee in to his daughter, the Princess Budur, thy lover; but when about going in to her do thou say to him:—Grant me three days' delay, and if she recover, give her to me to wife; and if not, deal with me as thou dealtest with those who forewent me. He will assuredly agree to this, so as soon as thou art alone with her, discover thyself to number of figures; and then the combination is sought in an explanatory table, or, if the practitioner be expert, he pronounces off-hand. The Nights speak of a "Takht Raml" or a board, like a schoolboy's slate, upon which the dots are inked instead of points in sand. The moderns use a "Kura'h," or oblong die, upon whose sides the dots, odd and even, are marked; and these dice are hand-thrown to form the figure. By way of complication Geomancy is mixed up with astrology, and then it becomes a most complicated kind of aridation and an endless study. "Napoleon's Book of Fate," a chap-book which appeared some years ago, was Geomancy in its simplest and most ignorant shape. For the rude African form see my Mission to Dahome, i. 332; and for that of Darfour, pp. 360-69 of Shaykh Mohammed's Voyage before quoted.

¹ I have noticed the geomantic process in my "History of Sindh" (chapt. vii) It is called "Zarb al-Raml" (strike of sand, the French say "frapper le sable") because the rudest form is to make on the ground dots at hap hazard, usually in four lines one above the other: these are counted and, if even-numbered, two are taken (* ); if odd, one (); and thus the four lines will form a scheme say * * . This is repeated three times, producing the same

her; and when she seeth thee she will recover strength, and her madness will cease from her and she will be made whole in one night. Then do thou give her to eat and drink, and her father, rejoicing in her recovery, will marry thee to her and share his kingdom with thee; for he hath imposed on himself this condition, and so the Peace be upon thee." Now when Kamar al-Zaman heard these words he exclaimed, "May I never lack thy benefits!" and, taking the set of instruments aforesaid, sallied forth from the caravanserai in the dress of his order. He walked on till he stood under the walls of King Ghayur's palace, where he began to cry out, saying, "I am the Scribe, I am the ready Reckoner, I am he who knoweth the Sought and the Seeker; I am he who openeth the Volume and summeth up the Sums¹; who Dreams can expound whereby the sought is found! Where, then, is the Seeker?" Now when the city people heard this, they flocked to him, for it was long since they had seen Scribe or Astrologer, and they stood round him, and looking upon him they saw one in the prime of beauty and grace and perfect elegance, and they marvelled at his loveliness, and his fine stature and symmetry. Presently one of them accosted him and said, "Allah upon thee, O thou fair and young, with the eloquent tongue! incur not this affray; nor throw thy life away in thine ambition to marry the Princess Budur. Only cast thine eyes upon yonder heads hung up; all their owners have lost their lives in this same venture." Yet Kamar al-Zaman paid no heed to them, but cried out at the top of his voice, saying, "I am the Doctor, the Scrivener! I am the Astrologer, the Calculator!" And all the townsfolk forbade him from this, but he regarded them not at all, saying in his mind, "None knoweth desire save whoso suffereth it." Then he began again to cry his loudest, shouting, "I am the Scrivener, I am the Astrologer!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman in no wise heeded the words of the citizens, but continued to cry out, "I am the Calculator! I am the Astrologer!"

¹ Translators understand this of writing marriage contracts; I take it in a more general sense

Thereupon all the townsfolk were wroth with him and said to him, "Thou art nothing but an imbecile, silly, self-willed lad! Have pity on thine own youth and tender years and beauty and loveliness." But he cried all the more, "I am the Astrologer! I am the Calculator! Is there any one that seeketh?" As he was thus crying and the people forbidding him, behold! King Ghayur heard his voice and the clamour of the lieges and said to his Wazir, "Go down and bring me yon Astrologer." So the Wazir went down in haste, and taking Kamar al-Zaman from the midst of the crowd led him up to the King; and when in the presence he kissed ground and began versifying:—

Eight glories meet, all, all conjoined in thee, * Whereby may Fortune aye thy servant be:

Lere, lordliness, grace, generosity; * Plain words, deep meaning, honour, victory!

When the King looked upon him, he seated him by his side and said to him, "By Allah, O my son! an thou be not an astrologer, venture not thy life nor comply with my condition; for I have bound myself that whoso goeth in to my daughter and healeth her not of that which hath befallen her, I will strike off his head; but whoso healeth her him I will marry to her. So let not thy beauty and loveliness delude thee: for, by Allah! and again, by Allah! if thou cure her not, I will assuredly cut off thy head." And Kamar al-Zaman replied, "This is thy right; and I consent, for I wot of this ere came I hither." Then King Ghayur took the Kazis to witness against him and delivered him to the eunuch, saying, "Carry this one to the Lady Budur." So the eunuch took him by the hand and led him along the passage; but Kamar al-Zaman outstripped him and pushed on before, whilst the eunuch ran after him, saying, "Woe to thee! Hasten not to thine own ruin; never yet saw I astrologer so eager for his proper destruction; but thou weetest not what calamities are before thee." Thereupon Kamar al-Zaman turned away his face from the eunuch—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the eunuch thus addressed Kamar al-Zaman, "Patience, and no indecent hurry!" the Prince turned away his face and began repeating these couplets:—

A Sage, I feel a fool before thy charms ; * Distraught, I wot not what the words I say :

If say I "Sun," away thou dost not pass * From eyes of me, while suns go down with day :

Thou hast completed Beauty, in whose praise * Speech-makers fail and talkers lose their way.

Then the eunuch stationed Kamar al-Zaman behind the curtain of the Princess's door and the Prince said to him, "Which of the two ways will please thee more; treat and cure thy lady from here or go in and heal her within the curtain?" The eunuch marvelled at his words and answered, "An thou heal her from here it were better proof of thy skill." Upon this Kamar al-Zaman sat down behind the curtain and taking out ink-case, pen and paper, wrote the following:—"This is the writ of one whom passion swayeth * and whom longing waylayeth * and wakeful misery slayeth * one who despaireth of living * and looketh for naught but dying * with whose mourning heart * nor comforter nor helper taketh part * One whose sleepless eyes * none succoureth from anxieties * whose day is passed in fire * and his night in torturing desire * whose body is wasted for much emaciation * and no messenger from his beloved bringeth him consolation." And after this he indited the following couplets:—

I write with heart devoted to thy thought, * And eyelids chafed by tears of blood they bled ;

And body clad, by loving pine and pain, * In shirt of leanness, and worn down to thread,

To thee complain I of Love's tormonty, * Which ousted hapless Patience from her stead :

A toi! show favour and some mercy deign, * For Passion's cruel hands my vitals shred.

And beneath his lines he wrote these cadenced sentences, "The heart's pain is removed * by union with the beloved * and whomso his lover paineth * only Allah assaineth ! * If we or you have wrought deceit * may the deceiver win defeat ! * There is naught goodlier than a lover who keeps faith * with the beloved who works him scathe." Then, by way of subscription, he wrote, "From the distracted and despairing man * whom love and longing trepan * from the lover under passion's ban * the prisoner of transport and distraction * from this Kamar al-Zaman * son of Shahrیمان * to the peerless one * of the fair Houris the pearl-union * to the Lady Budur * daughter of King Al-Ghayur * Know thou that by night I am sleepless * and by day in distress * consumed with increasing wasting and pain * and longing and love unfain * abounding in sighs * with tear-flooded eyes * by passion captive ta'en * of Desire the slain * with heart seared by the parting of us twain * the debtor of longing-bane, of sickness cup-companion * I am the sleepless one, who never closeth eye * the slave of love, whose tears run never dry * for the fire of my heart is still burning :: and never hidden is the flame of my yearning." Then on the margin Kamar al-Zaman wrote this admired verse :—

Salam from graces hoarded by my Lord * To her, who holds my heart and soul in hoard !

And also these :—

Pray'ec grant me some words from your lips, belike * Such mercy may comfort and cool these eyne :

From the stress of my love and my pine for you, * I make light of what makes me despised, indign :

Allah guard a folk whose abode was far, * And whose secret I kept in the holiest shrine :

Now Fortune in kindness hath favoured me * Thrown on threshold dust of this love o' mine :

By me bedded I looked on Budúr, whose sun * The moon of my fortunes hath made to shine.

Then, having affixed his seal-ring to the missive, he wrote these couplets in the place of address :—

Ask of my writ what wrote my pen in dole, * And hear my tale of misery from this scroll ;

My hand is writing while my tears down flow * And to the paper
'plains my longing soul :

My tears cease not to roll upon this sheet * And if they stopped I'd cause blood-gouts to roll.

And at the end he added this other verse :—

I've sent the ring from off thy finger bore * I when we met; now deign my ring restore !

Then Kamar al-Zaman set the Lady Budur's ring inside the letter and sealed it and gave it to the eunuch, who took it and went in with it to his mistress ;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman after setting the seal-ring inside the epistle gave it to the eunuch, who took it and went in with it to his mistress ; and when the Lady Budur opened it she found therein her own very ring. Then she read the paper, and when she understood its purport and knew that it was from her beloved, and that he in person stood behind the curtain, her reason began to fly and her breast swelled for joy and rose high; and she repeated these couplets:—

Long, long have I bewailed the sev'rance of our loves, * With tears that from my lids streamed down like burning rain;

And vowed that, if the days deign reunite us two, * My lips should never speak of severance again;

Joy hath o'erwhelmed me so that, for the very stress * Of that which gladdens me to weeping I am fain.

Tears are become to you a habit, O my eyes, * So that ye weep as well for gladness as for pain.¹

And having finished her verse, the Lady Budur stood up forthwith and firmly setting her feet to the wall, strained with all her might upon the collar of iron, till she brake it from her neck and snapped the chains. Then going forth from behind the curtain she threw herself on Kamar al-Zaman and kissed him on the mouth, like a pigeon feeding its young.² And she embraced him with all the stress of her love and longing and said to him, "O my lord, do I wake or sleep, and hath the Almighty indeed vouchsafed us reunion after disunion? Laud be to Allah, who hath our loves repaired even after we despaired!" Now when the eunuch saw her in this case, he went off running to King Ghayur and, kissing ground before him, said, "O my lord, know that this Astrologer is indeed the Shaykh of all astrologers, who are fools to him, all of them; for verily he hath cured thy daughter while standing behind the curtain and without going in to her." Quoth the King, "Look well to it, be this news true?" Answered the eunuch, "O my lord, rise and come and see for thyself how she hath found strength to break the iron chains and is come forth to the Astrologer, kissing and embracing him." Thereupon the King arose and went in to his daughter who, when she saw him, stood up in haste and covered her head,³ and recited these two couplets:—

The tooth stick love I not; for when I say, * "Siwák,"⁴ I miss thee, for it sounds "Siwá-ka";

¹ These lines are repeated from vol. ii. night lxxv.: with Mr. Payne's permission I give his rendering (iii. 153) by way of variety.

² The comparison is characteristically Arab.

³ Not her "face": the head, and especially the back of the head, must always be kept covered, even before the father. Swedenborg declares that no angel is allowed to stand behind another and look at the back of his head, because this would interrupt the divine influx (Heaven and Hell, § 144).

⁴ Arab "Siwák" = a tooth-stick; "Siwá-ka" = lit other than thou.

The caper-tree I love; for when I say, "Arák¹" it sounds I look on thee, "Ará-ka."

Thereupon the King was so transported for joy at her recovery that he felt like to fly and kissed her between the eyes, for he loved her with dearest love; then, turning to Kamar al-Zaman, he asked him who he was, and said, "What countryman art thou?" So the Prince told him his name and rank, and informed him that he was the son of King Shahrinán, and presently related to him the whole story from beginning to end; and acquainted him with what happened between himself and the Lady Budur; and how he had taken her seal-ring from her finger and had placed it on his own; whereat Ghayur marvelled and said, "Verily your story deserveth in books to be chronicled, and when you are dead and gone by age after age to be read." Then he summoned Kazis and witnesses forthright and married the Lady Budur to Prince Kamar al-Zaman; after which he bade decorate the city seven days long. So they spread the tables with all manner of meats, whilst the drums beat and the criers announced the glad tidings, and all the troops donned their richest clothes; and they illuminated the city and held high festival. Then Kamar al-Zaman went in to the Lady Budur and the King rejoiced in her recovery and in her marriage; and praised Allah for that He had made her to fall in love with a goodly youth of the sons of Kings. So they unveiled her and displayed the bride before the bridegroom; and both were the living likeness of each other in beauty and comeliness and grace and love-allurement. Then Kamar al-Zaman lay with her that night and took his will of her, whilst she in like manner fulfilled her desire of him and enjoyed his charms and grace; and they slept in each other's arms till the morning. On the morrow, the King made a wedding-feast

¹ Arab. "Arák" = tooth-stick of the wild caper-tree; "Ará-ka" lit. I see thee. The caparis spinosa is a common desert-grower and the sticks about a span long (usually called Miswák), are sold in quantities at Meccah after being dipped in Zemzem water. In India many other woods are used, date-tree, Salvadora, Achyranthes, Phyllanthus, etc. Amongst Arabs peculiar efficacy accompanies the tooth-stick of olive, "the tree springing from Mount Sinai" (Koran, xxiii. 20); and Mohammed would use no other, because it prevents decay and scents the mouth. Hence Koran, chap. xc. 1. "The Miswák" is held with the unused end between the ring-finger and minimus, the two others grasp the middle, and the thumb is pressed against the back close to the lips. These articles have long been sold at the Medical Hall near the "Egyptian Hall," Piccadilly. They are better than our unclean tooth-brushes because each tooth gets its own especial rubbing, not a general sweep; at the same time the operation is longer and more troublesome. In parts of Africa as well as Asia many men walk about with the tooth stick hanging by a string from the neck.

whereto he gathered all comers from the Islands of the Inner and Outer Seas, and he spread the tables with choicest viands nor ceased the banquetting for a whole month. Now when Kamar al-Zaman had thus fulfilled his will and attained his inmost desire, and whenas he had tarried awhile with the Princess Budur, he bethought him of his father, King Shahrman, and saw him in a dream, saying, "O my son, is it thus thou dealest with me?" and reciting in the vision these two couplets:—

Indeed to watch the darkness-moon he blighted me, * And to star-gaze through longsome night he plighted me:
Easy, my heart! for haply he'll unite with thee; * And patience, Sprite! with whatso ills he dight to thee.

Now after seeing his father in the dream and hearing his reproaches, Kamar al-Zaman awoke in the morning afflicted and troubled, whereupon the Lady Budur questioned him and he told her what he had seen—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Kamar al-Zaman acquainted the Lady Budur with what he had seen in his dream, she and he went in to her sire and telling him what had passed, besought his leave to travel. He gave the Prince the permission he sought; but the Princess said, "O my father, I cannot bear to be parted from him." Quoth Ghayur, her sire, "Then go thou with him," and gave her leave to be absent a whole twelvemonth and afterwards to visit him in every year once; so she kissed his hand and Kamar al-Zaman did the like. Thereupon King Ghayur proceeded to equip his daughter and her bridegroom for the journey, and furnished them with outfit and appointments for the march; and brought out of his stables horses marked with his own brand, blood-dromedaries¹ which can journey ten days without water, and prepared a litter for his daughter, besides loading mules and camels with victual; moreover, he gave them slaves and eunuchs to serve them and all manner of travelling gear; and on the day of departure, when King Ghayur took leave of Kamar al-Zaman, he bestowed on him ten splendid suits of cloth of gold, embroidered with stones of price, together with ten riding horses and ten she-camels, and a treasury of money¹; and he charged him to love and cherish his daughter the Lady Budur. Then the King accompanied them to the farthest limits of his Islands where going in to his daughter Budur in the litter he kissed her and strained her to his bosom, weeping and repeating :—

¹ The "Mehari" of which the Algerine-French speak, are the dromedaries bred by the Mahrab tribe of Al-Yaman, the descendants of Mahrat ibn Haydân. They are covered by small wild camels (?) called Al-Hûsh, found between Oman and Al-Shihir: others explain the word to mean "stallions of the jinns," and term those savage and supernatural animals, "Najâib al-Mahriyah"—nobles of the Mahrab.

O thou who woost Severance, easy fare ! * For love-embrace belongs to lover-friend :

Fare softly ! Fortune's nature falsehood is, * And parting shall love's every meeting end

Then leaving his daughter, he went to her husband and bade him farewell and kissed him ; after which he parted from them, and giving the order for the march he returned to his capital with his troops. The Prince and Princess and their suite fared on without stopping through the first day and the second and the third and the fourth ; nor did they stint faring for a whole month till they came to a spacious champaign, abounding in pasturage, where they pitched their tents ; and they ate and drank and rested, and the Princess Budur lay down to sleep. Presently, Kamar al-Zaman went in to her and found her lying asleep clad in a shift of apricot-coloured silk ; and on her head was a coif of gold-cloth embroidered with pearls and jewels. The breeze raised her shift which laid bare her navel and showed her breasts and displayed a stomach whiter than snow, each one of whose dimples would contain an ounce of benzoin-ointment.² At this sight his love and longing redoubled, and he began reciting :—

An were it asked me when by hell-fire burnt, * When flames of heart my vitals hold and hem,

" Which wouldst thou choose, say wouldst thou rather them, * Or drink sweet cooling draught ? " I'd answer, " Them ! "

1 Arab "Khaznah" = a thousand purses, now about £5000. It denotes a large sum of money, like the "Badrah," a purse containing 10,000 dirhams of silver (Al-Hariri), or 80,000 (Burekhardt Prov. 380), whereas the "Nisab" is a moderate sum of money, gen. 20 gold dinars = 200 silver dirhams.

2 As the Nights show, Arabs admire slender forms ; but the hips and hinder-cheeks must be highly developed and the stomach fleshy rather than lean. The Persians who exaggerate everything, say, e.g. (Husayn Vâiz in the Anvâr-i-Suhayli) :—

How paint her hips and waist ? Who saw

A mountain (Koh) dangling to a straw (kâh) ?

In Antar his beloved Abia is a tamarisk (T. Orientalis). Others compare with the palm-tree (Solomon), the Cypress (Persian, esp. Hafiz and Firdausi) and the Arak or wild Capparis (Arab).

Then he put his hand to the band of her petticoat-trousers and drew it, when he saw a jewel, red as dye-wood, made fast to the band. He untied it and examined it and, seeing two lines of writing graven thereon in a character not to be read, marvelled and said in his mind, "Were not this bezel something to her very dear she had not bound it to her trousers-band nor hidden it in the most privy and precious place about her person that she might not be parted from it. Would I knew what she doth with this and what is the secret that is in it." So saying he took it and went outside the tent to look at it in the light,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when he took the bezel to look at it in the light, the while he was holding it behold, a bird swooped down on him and snatching the same from his hand, flew off with it and then lighted on the ground. Thereupon Kamar al-Zaman, fearing to lose the jewel, ran after the bird; but it flew on before him, keeping just out of his reach, and ceased not to draw him on from dale to dale and from hill to hill, till the night starked and firmament darkened, when it roosted on a high tree. So Kamar al-Zaman stopped under the tree confounded in thought and faint for famine and fatigue and giving himself up for lost, would have turned back, but knew not the way whereby he came, for that darkness had overtaken him. Then he exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" and laying him down under the tree (whereon was the bird), slept till the morning, when he awoke and saw the bird also wake up and fly away. He arose and walked after it, and it flew on little by little before him, after the measure of his faring; at which he smiled and said, "By Allah, a strange thing! Yesterday this bird flew before me as fast as I could run, and to-day, knowing that I have awoke tired and cannot run, he flieth after the measure of my faring. By Allah, this is wonderful! But I must needs follow this bird whether it lead me to death or to life; and I will go wherever it goeth, for at all events it will not abide save in some inhabited land." So

¹ Ubi aves ibi angeli. All African travellers know that a few birds flying about the bush, and a few palm-trees waving in the wind denote the neigh-

he continued to follow the bird, which roosted every night upon a tree; and he ceased not pursuing it for a space of ten days, feeding on the fruits of the earth and drinking of its waters. At the end of this time he came in sight of an inhabited city, whereupon the bird darted off like the glance of the eye and, entering the town, disappeared from Kamar al-Zaman, who knew not what it meant or whither it was gone; so he marvelled at this and exclaimed, "Praise be to Allah, Who hath brought me in safety to this city!" Then he sat down by a stream and washed his hands and feet and face and rested awhile; and, recalling his late easy and pleasant life of union with his beloved and contrasting it with his present plight of trouble and fatigue and distress and strangerhood and famine and severance, the tears streamed from his eyes and he began repeating these cinquains:—

Fain had I hid thy handwork, but it showed, * Changed sleep for wake, and wake with me abode:

When thou didst spurn my heart I cried aloud, * Fate, hold thy hand and cease to gird and goad:

In dole and danger aye my sprite I spy!

And but the Lord of Love were just to me, * Sleep from my eyelids ne'er were forced to flee.

Pity, my lady, one for love o' thee * From his tribe's darling brought to low degree:

Love came and doomed Wealth beggar-death to die.

The railers chide at thee; I ne'er gainsay, * But stop my ears and dumbly sign them Nay:

"Thou lov'st a slender may," say they; I say, * "I've picked her out and cast the rest away":

Enough; when Fate descends she blinds man's eye!¹

And as soon as he had finished his poetry and had taken his rest, he rose and walked on little by little till he entered the city.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

bourhood of a village or a camp (where angels are scarce). The reason is not any friendship for man, but because food, animal and vegetable, is more plentiful. Hence Albatrosses, Mother Carey's (Mater Cara, the Virgin) chickens, and Cape pigeons follow ships.

¹ The stanza is called Al-Mukhammas = cinquains; the quatrains, and the "bob," or "burden," always preserve the same consonance. It ends with a Koranic lieu commun of Moslem morality.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that as soon as Kamar al-Zaman had finished his poetry and had taken his rest, he arose and entered the city-gate¹ not knowing whither he should wend. He crossed the city from end to end, entering by the land-gate, and ceased not faring on till he came out at the sea-gate, for the city stood on the sea-shore. Yet he met not a single one of its citizens. And after issuing from the land-gate he fared forwards and ceased not faring till he found himself among the orchards and gardens of the place; and, passing among the trees, presently came to a garden and he stopped before its door; whereupon the keeper came out to him and saluted him. The Prince returned his greeting and the gardener bade him welcome, saying, "Praised be Allah that thou hast come off safe from the dwellers of this city! Quick, come into the garth, ere any of the townfolk see thee." Thereupon Kamar al-Zaman entered that garden, wondering in mind, and asked the keeper, "What may be the history of the people of this city, and who may they be?" The other answered, "Know that the people of this city are all Magians: but Allah upon thee! tell me how thou camest to this city and what caused thy coming to our capital." Accordingly Kamar al-Zaman told the gardener all that had befallen him from beginning to end, whereat he marvelled with great marvel and said, "Know, O my son, that the cities of Al-Iskun lie far from us; and between us and them is a four months' voyage by sea and a whole twelve months' journey by land. We have a ship which saileth every year with merchandise to the nearest Moslem country and which entereth the seas of the Ebony Islands and thence maketh the Khalidan Islands, the dominions of King Shahrinan." Thereupon Kamar al-Zaman considered awhile and concluded that he could not do better than abide in the garden with the gardener and become his assistant, receiving for pay one-fourth of the produce. So he said to him, "Wilt thou take me into thy service, to help thee in this garden?" Answered the gardener, "To hear is to consent"; and began teaching him to lead the water to the roots of the trees. So Kamar al-Zaman abode with him, watering the trees and hoeing up the weeds and wearing a short blue frock

¹ Moslem port towns usually have (or had) only two gates. Such was the case with Bayrut, Tyre, Sidon and a host of others; the faubourg-growth of modern days has made these obsolete. The portals much resemble the entrances of old Norman castles—Arques, for instance. (Pilgrimage, i. 185.)

which reached to his knees. And he wept floods of tears; for he had no rest day or night by reason of his strangerhood, and he ceased not to repeat verses upon his beloved, amongst others the following couplets :—

Ye promised us, and will ye not keep plight? * Ye said a say and shall not deed be dight?

We wake for passion while ye slumber and sleep; * Watchers and wakers claim not equal right:

We vowed to keep our loves in secrecy, * But spake the meddler and you spoke forthright:

O friend in pain and pleasure, joy and grief, * In all case you, you only, claim my sprite!

'Mid folk is one who holds my prisoned heart; * Would he but show some ruth for me to sight.

Not every eye like mine is wounded sore, * Not every heart like mine love-pinings blight:

Ye wronged me, saying, Love is wrongous aye! * Yea! ye were right, events have proved that quite.

Forget they one love-thralled, whose faith the world * Robs not, though burn the fires in heart alight:

If an my foeman shall become my judge, * Whom shall I sue to remedy his despight?

Had not I need of love nor love had sought, * My heart forsure were not thus love-distraught.

Such was the case with Kamar al-Zaman; but as regards his wife, the Lady Budur, when she awoke she sought her husband and found him not: then she saw her petticoat-trousers undone, for the band had been loosed and the bezel lost, whereupon she said to herself, "By Allah, this is strange! Where is my husband? It would seem as if he had taken the talisman and gone away, knowing not the secret which is in it. Would to Heaven I knew whither can he have wended! But it must needs have been some extraordinary matter that drew him away, for he cannot brook to leave me a moment. Allah curse the stone and damn its hour!" Then she considered awhile and said in her mind, "If I go out and tell the varlets and let them learn that my husband is lost, they will lust after me; there is no help for it but that I use stratagem." So she rose and donned some of her husband's clothes and riding-boots, and a turband like his, drawing one corner of it across her face for a mouth-veil.¹ Then, setting a slave-girl in her litter, she went forth from the tent and called to the pages who brought her Kamar al-Zaman's steed; and she mounted and bade them load the beasts and resume the march. So they bound on the burdens and departed; and she concealed her trick, none doubting but she was Kamar al-Zaman, for she favoured him in face and form; nor did she cease journeying, she and her suite, days and nights, till they came in sight of a city overlooking the Salt Sea, where they pitched their tents without the walls and halted to rest. The Princess asked the name of the town and was told, "It is called the City of Ebony; its King is named Armanús, and he hath a daughter Hayál al-Nufús¹ hight,"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

1 Arab. "Lisâm"; before explained.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Lady Budur halted within sight of the Ebony City to take her rest, King Armanus sent a messenger to learn what King it was who had encamped without his capital; so the messenger, coming to the tents, made enquiry anent their King, and was told that she was a King's son who had lost the way, being bound for the Khalidan Islands; whereupon he returned to King Armanus with the tidings; and when the King heard them, he straightway rode out with the lords of his land to greet the stranger on arrival. As he drew near the tents the Lady Budur came to meet him on foot, whereupon the King alighted and they saluted each other. Then he took her to the city, and, bringing her up to the palace, bade them spread the tables and trays of food, and commanded them to transport her company and baggage to the guest-house. So they abode there three days, at the end of which time the King came in to the Lady Budur. Now she had that day gone to the Hammam, and her face shone as the moon at its full, a seduction to the world and a rending of the veil of shame to mankind; and Armanus found her clad in a suit of silk, embroidered with gold and jewels; so he said to her, "O my son, know that I am a very old man, deerpit withal, and Allah hath blessed me with no child save one daughter, who resembleth thee in beauty and grace; and I am now waxed unfit for the conduct of the state. She is thine, O my son; and, if this my land please thee, and thou be willing to abide and make thy home here, I will marry thee to her and give thee my kingdom, and so be at rest." When Princess Budur heard this, she bowed her head, and her forehead sweated for shame, and she said to herself, "How shall I do, and I a woman? If I refuse and depart from him, I cannot be safe but that haply he send after me troops to slay me; and if I consent, belike I shall be put to shame. I have lost my beloved Kamar al-Zaman, and know not what is become of him; nor can I escape from this scrape save by holding my peace and consenting and abiding here, till Allah bring about what is to be." So she raised her head and made submission to King Armanus, saying, "Hearkening and obedience!" whereat he rejoiced and bade the herald make proclamation throughout the Ebony Islands to hold high festival and decorate the houses. Then he assembled his Chamberlains and Nabobs and Emirs and Wazirs and his officers of state and the Kazis of the city; and formally abdicating his Sultanate endowed Budur therewith and invested her in all the vestments of royalty. The Emirs and Grandees went in to her and did her homage, nothing doubting but that she was a young man, and all who looked on her piddled in their bag-trousers for the excess of her beauty and loveliness. Then, after the Lady Budur had been made Sultan and the drums had been beaten in announcement of the glad event, and she had been ceremoniously enthroned, King Armanus proceeded to equip his daughter Hayat al-Nufus for marriage, and in a few days, they brought the Lady Budur in to her, when they seemed as it were two moons risen at one time or two suns in conjunction. So they entered the bridal-chamber and the doors were shut and the curtains let down upon them, after the attendants had lighted the wax-candles and spread for them the carpet-bed. When Budur found herself alone with the Princess Hayat al-Nufus, she called to mind her beloved Kamar al-Zaman, and grief was sore upon her. So she wept for his absence and estrangement, and she began repeating:—

¹ i.e., Life of Souls (persons, etc.).

• O ye who fled and left my heart in pain low lien, * No breath of life is found within this frame of mine;
I have an eye which e'er complains of wake, but lo! * Tears occupy it; would that wake content these eyne!
After ye marchèd forth the lover 'bode behind; * Question of him what pains your absence could design!
But for the floods of tears mine eyelids rail and rain, * My fires would flame on high and every land calcine.
To Allah make I moan of loved ones lost for aye, * Who for my pine and pain no more shall pain and pine:
I never wronged them save that over-love I nursed: * But Love departs us lovers into blest and eurst.

And when she had finished her repeating, the Lady Budur sat down beside the Princess Hayat al-Nufus and kissed her on the mouth; after which, rising abruptly, she made the minor ablution and betook herself to her devotion; nor did she leave praying till Hayat al-Nufus fell asleep, when she slipped into bed and lay with her back to her till morning. And when day had broken the King and Queen came in to their daughter and asked her how she did, whereupon she told them what she had seen, and repeated to them the verses she had heard. Thus far concerning Hayat al-Nufus and her father; but as regards Queen Budur, she went forth and seated herself upon the royal throne, and all the Emirs and Captains and Officers of state came up to her and wished her joy of the kingship, kissing earth before her and calling down blessings upon her. And she accosted them with smiling face and clad them in robes of honour, augmenting the fiefs of the high officials and giving largesse to the levies; wherefore all the people loved her and offered up prayers for the long endurance of her reign, doubting not but that she was a man. And she ceased not sitting all day in the hall of audience, bidding and forbidding; dispensing justice, releasing prisoners and remitting the customs-dues, till nightfall, when she withdrew to the apartment prepared for her. Here she found Hayat al-Nufus seated; so she sat down by her side and, clapping her on the back, coaxed and caressed her and kissed her between the eyes, and fell to versifying in these couplets:—

What secret kept I these my tears have told, * And my waste body must my love unfold :

Though hid my pine, my plight on parting-day * To every envious eye my secret sold :

O ye who broke up camp, you've left behind * My spirit wearied and my heart a-cold :

In my heart's core ye dwell, and now these eyes * Roll blood-drops with the tears they whilome rolled :

The absent will I ransom with my soul; * All can my yearning for their sight behold :

I have an eye whose babe,¹ for love of thee. * Rejected sleep nor hath its tears controlled.

¹ Arab. "Insánu-há" = her (i.e., their) man : i.e., the babes of the eyes; the Assyrian Ishon. dim. of Ish = Man, which the Hebrews call "Bábat" or "Bit" (the daughter); the Arabs "Bubu" (or Hadakat) al-Ayn; the Persians "Mardumak-i-chashm" (mannikin of the eye); the Greeks κόρη, and the Latins pupa, pupula, pupilla. I have noted this in the Lyrics of Camoens (p. 449).

The foeman bids me patient bear his loss, * Ne'er may mine ears accept the ruth he doled !
I trickt their deme of me, and won my wish * Of Kamar al-Zaman's joys manifold :
He joins all perfect gifts like none before ; * Boasted such might and main no king of old :
Seeing his gifts, Bin Zâ'idah's¹ largesse * Forget we, and Mu'âwiyah mildest soul'd² :
Were verse not feeble and o'er short the time * I had in laud of him used all of rhyme.

Then Queen Budur stood up and wiped away her tears and making the lesser ablution,³ applied her to pray: nor did she give over praying till drowsiness overcame the Lady Hayat al-Nufus and she slept, whereupon the Lady Budur came and lay by her till the morning. At daybreak she arose and prayed the dawn-prayer; and presently seated herself on the royal throne and passed the day in ordering and counter-ordering and giving laws and administering justice. This is how it fared with her; but as regards King Armanus, he went in to his daughter and asked her how she did; so she told him all that had befallen her and repeated to him the verses which Queen Budur had recited, adding, "O my father, never saw I one more abounding in sound sense and modesty than my husband, save that he doth nothing but weep and sigh." He answered, "O my daughter, have patience with him yet this third night, and if he go not in unto thee and do away thy virginity, we shall know how to proceed with him and oust him from the throne and banish him the country." And on this wise he agreed with his daughter what course he would take—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Tenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when King Armanus had agreed with his daughter on this wise and had determined what course he would take and night came on, Queen Budur arose from the throne of her kingdom and betaking herself

¹ Ma'n bin Zâ'idah, a soldier and statesman of the eighth century.

² The mildness of the Caliph Mu'âwiyah, the founder of the Omniades, is proverbial among the Arabs.

³ Showing that there had been no consummation of the marriage, which would have demanded "Ghusl," or total ablution, at home or in the Hammam.

to the palace entered the apartment prepared for her. There she found the wax-candles lighted and the Princess Hayat al-Nufus seated and awaiting her; whereupon she bethought her of her husband, and what had betided them both of sorrow and severance in so short a space; she wept and sighed and groaned upon groan, and began improvising these couplets:—

News of my love fill all the land, I swear, * As suns on Ghazál-wold rain heat and glare: Speaketh his geste but hard its sense to say; * Thus never cease to grow my care and care:
I hate fair Patience since I lovèd thee; * E'er sawest lover hate for Love to bear?
A glance that dealt love-sickness dealt me death, * Glances are deadliest things with torments rare:
He shook his love-locks down and bared his chin, * Whereby I spied his beauties dark and fair:
My care, my cure are in his hands; and he * Who caused their dolour can their dole repair:
His belt went fast for softness of his waist; * His hips, for envy, to uprise forbear:
His brow, curl diademed, is murky night; * Unveil 't and lo! bright Morn shows brightest light.

When she had finished her versifying she would have risen to pray, but, lo and behold! Hayat al-Nufus caught her by the skirt and clung to her saying, "O my lord, art thou not ashamed before my father, after all his favour, to neglect me at such a time as this?" When Queen Budur heard her words, she sat down in the same place and said, "O my beloved, what is this thou sayest?" She replied, "What I say is that I never saw any so proud of himself as thou. Is every fair one so disdainful? I say not this to incline thee to me; I say it only of my fear for thee from King Armanus; because he purposeth, unless thou go in unto me this very night, and do away my virginity, to strip thee of the kingship on the morrow and banish thee his kingdom; and peradventure his excessive anger may lead him to slay thee. But I, O my lord, have ruth on thee and give thee fair warning; and it is thy right to reck.¹" Now when Queen Budur heard her speak these words, she bowed her head ground-wards awhile in sore perplexity and said in herself, "If I refuse I'm lost; and if I obey I'm shamed. But I am now Queen of all the Ebony Islands and they are under my rule, nor shall I ever again meet my Kamar al-Zaman save in this place; for there is no way for him to his native land but through the Ebony Islands. Verily, I know not what to do in my present case, but I commit my care unto Allah, who directeth all for the best, for I am no man that I should arise and open this virgin girl." Then quoth Queen Budur to Hayat al-Nufus, "O my beloved, that I have neglected thee and abstained from thee is in my own despite." And she told her her whole story from beginning to end and showed her person to her saying, "I conjure thee by Allah to keep my counsel, for I have concealed my case only that Allah may reunite me with my beloved Kamar al-Zaman and then come what may."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ I have noticed this notable desert-growth.

² The "situation" is admirable, solution appearing so difficult and catastrophe imminent.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eleventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Lady Budur acquainted Hayat al-Nufus with her history, and bade her keep it secret, the Princess heard her with extreme wonderment and was moved to pity and prayed Allah to reunite her with her beloved, saying, "Fear nothing, O my sister; but have patience till Allah bring to pass that which must come to pass": and she began repeating:—

None but the men of worth a secret keep;
With worthy men a secret's hidden deep;
As in a room, so secrets lie with me,
Whose door is sealed, lock shot, and lost the key.¹

And when Hayat al-Nufus had ended her verses, she said, "O my sister, verily the breasts of the noble and brave are of secrets the grave; and I will not discover thine." Then they toyed and embraced and kissed and slept till near the Mu'ezzin's call to dawn-prayer, when Hayat al-Nufus arose and cried aloud, whereupon her people hastened to her and raised the usual lullilooing and outcries of joy and gladness. Presently her mother came in to her and asked her how she did and busied herself about her and abode with her till evening; whilst the Lady Budur arose with the dawn, and repaired to the bath and, after washing herself pure, proceeded to the hall of audience, where she sat down on her throne and dispensed justice among the folk. Now when the King Armanus heard the loud cries of joy, he asked what was the matter and was informed of the consummation of his daughter's marriage; whereat he rejoiced and his breast swelled with gladness and he made a great marriage-feast whereof the merry-making lasted a long time. Such was their case: but as regards King Shahrیمان it was on this wise. After his son had fared forth to the chase accompanied by Marzawan, as before related, he tarried patiently awaiting their return at nightfall; but when his son did not appear, he passed a sleepless night and the dark hours were longsome upon him; his restlessness was excessive, his excitement grew upon him and he thought the morning would never dawn. And when day broke he sat expecting his son and waited till noon, but he came not; whereat his heart forebode separation and was fired with fears for Kamar al-Zaman; and he cried, "Alas, my son!" and he wept till his clothes were drenched with tears, and repeated with a beating heart:—

¹ This quatrain occurs in vol. i. night ix. I have borrowed from Torrens (p. 79) by way of variety.

Love's votaries I ceased not to oppose, * Till doomed to taste Love's bitter and Love's sweet:

I drained his rigour-cup to very dregs, * Self-humbled at its slaves' and freemen's feet;

Fortune had sworn to part the loves of us; * She kept her word how truly, well I weet!

And when he ended his verse he wiped away his tears and bade his troops make ready for a march and prepare for a long expedition. So they all mounted and set forth, headed by the Sultan, whose heart burnt with grief and was fired with anxiety for his son Kamar al-Zaman; and they advanced by forced marches. Now the King divided his host into six divisions, a right wing and a left wing, a vanguard and a rear-guard¹; and bade them rendezvous for the morrow at the cross-roads. Accordingly they separated and scoured the country all the rest of that day till night, and they marched through the night and at noon of the ensuing day they joined company at the place where four roads met. But they knew not which the Prince followed, till they saw the sign of torn clothes and sighted shreds of flesh, and beheld blood still sprinkled by the way, and they noted every piece of the clothes and fragment of mangled flesh scattered on all sides. Now when King Shahrیمان saw this, he cried from his heart-core a loud cry, saying, "Alas, my son!" and buffeted his face and pluckt his beard and rent his raiment, doubting not but his son was dead. Then he gave himself up to excessive weeping and wailing, and the troops also wept for his weeping, all being assured that Prince Kamar al-Zaman had perished. They threw dust on their heads, and the night surprised them shedding tears and lamenting till they were like to die. Then the King with a heart on fire and with burning sighs spake these couplets :—

¹ Not including the two central divisions commanded by the King and his Wazir.

Chide not the mourner for bemoaning woe ; * Enough is yearning every-ill to show :

He weeps for stress of sorrow and of pain, * And these to thee best evidence his love :

Happy¹ of whom Love-sickness swore that ne'er * Should cease his eyelids loving tears to flow :

He mourns the loss of fairest, fullest Moon, * Shining o'er all his peers in glorious glow :

But death a brimming cup made drink, what day * He fared from natal country fain to go :

His home left he and went from us to grief ; * Nor to his brethren could he say adieu :

Yea, his loss wounded me with parting pangs, * And separation cost me many a throe :

He fared, farwelling, as he fared, our eyes ; * Whenas his Lord vouchsafed him Paradise.

And when King Shahrman had ended his verses, he returned with the troops to his capital,—And Shabrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twelfth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when King Shahrman had ended his verses, he returned with the troops to his capital, giving up his son for lost, and deeming that wild beasts or banditti had set upon him and torn him to pieces ; and made proclamation that all in the Khalidan Islands should don black in mourning for him. Moreover, he built, in his memory, a pavilion, naming it House of Lamentations ; and on Mondays and Thursdays he devoted himself to the business of the state and ordering the affairs of his levies and lieges ; and the rest of the week he was wont to spend in the House of Lamentations, mourning for his son and bewailing him with elegiac verses,² of which the following are some :—

¹ Ironical.

² Arab. " Rasy " = praising in a funeral sermon.

My day of bliss is that when thou appearest ; * My day of bale¹ is that whereon thou farest :

Though through the night I quako in dread of death ; Union wi' thee is of all bliss the dearest.

And again he said :—

My soul be sacrifice for one, whose going * Afflicted hearts with sufferings sore and dread :

Let joy her widowed term² fulfil, for I Divorcèd joy with the divorce thrice-said.³

Such was the case with King Shahrīman ; but as regards Queen Budur daughter of King Ghayur, she abode as ruler in the Ebony Islands, whilst the folk would point to her with their fingers, and say, "Yonder is the son-in-law of King Armanus." And every night she lay with Hayat al-Nufus, to whom she lamented her desolate state and longing for her husband Kamar al-Zaman, weeping and describing to her his beauty and loveliness, and yearning to enjoy him though but in a dream. And at times she would repeat :—

When Allah wots that since my severance from thee, * I wept till forced to borrow tears at usury :

"Patience !" my blamer cried, "Heartsease right soon shalt sight !" *
Quoth I, "Say, blamer, where may home of Patience be ?"

This is how it fared with Queen Budur ; but as regards Kamar al-Zaman, he abode with the gardener in the garden for no short time, weeping night and day and repeating verses bewailing the past time of enjoyment and delight ; whilst the gardener kept comforting him and assuring him that the ship would set sail for the land of the Moslems at the end of the year. And in this condition he continued till one day he saw the folk crowding together, and wondered at this ; but the gardener came in to him and said, "O my son, give over work for this day nor lead water to the trees ; for it is a festival day, whereon folk visit one another. So take thy rest and only keep thine eye on the garden, whilst I go look after the ship for thee ; for yet but a little while and I send thee to the land of the Moslems." Upon this he went forth the garden leaving to himself Kamar al-Zaman, who fell to musing upon his case till his heart was like to break and the tears streamed from his eyes. So he wept with excessive weeping till he swooned away, and when he recovered he rose and walked about the garden, pondering what Time had done with him and bemoaning the long endurance of his estrangement and separation from those he loved. As he was thus absorbed in melancholy thought, his foot stumbled and he fell on his face, his forehead striking against the projecting root of a tree; and the blow cut it open and his blood ran down and mingled with his tears. Then he rose and wiping away the blood dried his tears and bound his brow with a piece of rag; then continued his walk about the garden engrossed by sad reverie. Presently he looked up at a tree and saw two birds quarrelling thereon, and one of them rose up and smote the other with its beak on the neck and severed from its body its head, wherewith it flew away, whilst the slain bird fell to the ground before Kamar al-Zaman. As it lay, behold! two great birds swooped down upon it, alighting one at the head and the other at the tail, and both drooped their wings and bowed their bills over it and, extending their necks towards it, wept. Kamar al-Zaman also wept when seeing the birds thus bewail their mate, and called to mind his wife and father,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Manáyá," plur. of Maniyat=death. Mr. R. S. Poole (the Academy, April 26, 1879) reproaches Mr. Payne for confounding "Muniyat" (desire) with "Maniyat" (death) ; but both are written the same except when vowel-points are used.

² Arab. "Iddat," alluding to the months of celibacy which, according to Moslem law, must be passed by a divorced woman before she can re-marry.

³ Arab. "Talák bi'l-Salásah"=a triple divorce which cannot be revoked ; nor can the divorcer re-marry the same woman till after consummation with another husband. This subject will continually recur.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman wept and lamented his separation from spouse and sire, when he beheld those two birds weeping over their mate. Then he looked at the twain and saw them dig a grave and therein bury the slain bird; after which they flew away far into the firmament and disappeared for a while; but presently they returned with the murderer-bird and alighting on the grave of the murdered stamped on the slayer till they had done him to death. Then they rent his belly and tearing out his entrails, poured the blood on the grave of the slain¹: moreover, they stripped off his skin and tare his flesh in pieces and pulling out the rest of the bowels scattered them hither and thither. All this while Kamar al-Zaman was watching them wonderingly; but presently, chancing to look at the place where the two birds had slain the third, he saw therein something gleaming. So he drew near to it and noted that it was the crop of the dead bird. Whereupon he took it and opened it and found the talisman which had been the cause of his separation from his wife. But when he saw it and knew it he fell to the ground a-fainting for joy; and as soon as he revived he said, "Praised be Allah! This is a foretaste of good and a presage of reunion with my beloved." Then he examined the jewel and passed it over his eyes¹; after which he bound it to his forearm, rejoicing in coming weal, and walked about till nightfall awaiting the gardener's return; and when he came not, he lay down and slept in his wonted place. At daybreak he rose to his work and girding his middle with a cord of palm-fibre, took hatchet and basket and walked down the length of the garden till he came to a carob-tree, and struck the axe into its roots. The blow rang and resounded; so he cleared away the soil from the place and discovered a trap-door and raised it.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ An allusion to a custom of the pagan Arabs in the days of ignorant Heathenism. The blood or brain, soul or personality, of the murdered man formed a bird called Sady or Hámah (not the Humá or Humái, usually translated "phoenix") which sprang from the head, where four of the five senses have their seat, and haunted his tomb, crying continually, "Uskúni!" = Give me drink (of the slayer's blood)! and which disappeared

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fourteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Kamar al-Zaman raised the trap-door he found a winding stair, which he descended and came to an ancient vault of the time of 'A'd and Thamûd,² hewn out of the rock. Round the vault stood many brazen vessels of the bigness of a great oil-jar, which he found full of gleaming red gold: whereupon he said to himself, "Verily sorrow is gone and solace is come!" Then he mounted from the souterrain to the garden and replacing the trap-door as it was before, busied himself in conducting water to the trees till the last of the day, when the gardener came back and said to him, "O my son, rejoice at the good tidings of a speedy return to thy native only when the vendetta was accomplished. Mohammed forbade the belief. Amongst the Southern Slavs the cuckoo is supposed to be the sister of a murdered man ever calling for vengeance.

¹ To obtain a blessing and show how he valued it.

² Well-known tribes of proto-historic Arabs who flourished before the time of Abraham, see Koran (chapt. xxvi. et passim). They will be repeatedly mentioned in The Nights and notes.

land: the merchants are ready equipped for the voyage and the ship in three days' time will set sail for the City of Ebony, which is the first of the cities of the Moslems; and after making it thou must travel by land a six months' march till thou come to the Islands of Khalidan, the dominions of King Shahriman." At this 'Kamar al-Zaman rejoiced and began repeating:—

Part not from one whose wont is not to part from you; * Nor with your cruel taunts an innocent mortify:
Another so long-parted had ta'en heart from you, * And had his whole condition changed,—but not so I.

Then he kissed the gardener's hand and said, "O my father, even as thou hast brought me glad tidings, so I also have great good news for thee," and told him anent his discovery of the vault; whereat the gardener rejoiced and said, "O my son, fourscore years have I dwelt in this garden and have never hit on aught; whilst thou, who hast not sojourned with me a year, hast discovered this thing; wherefore it is Heaven's gift to thee, which shall end thy crosses and aid thee to rejoin thy folk and forgather with her thou lovest." Quoth Kamar al-Zaman, "There is no help but it must be shared between me and thee." Then he carried him to the underground-chamber and showed him the gold, which was in twenty jars: he took ten and the gardener ten, and the old man said to him, "O my son, fill thyself leather bottles¹ with the sparrow-olives² which grow in this garden, for they are not found except in our land; and the merchants carry them to all parts. Lay the gold in the bottles and strew it over with olives: then stop them and cover them and take them with thee in the ship." So Kamar al-Zaman arose without stay or delay, and took fifty leather bottles and stored in each somewhat of the gold, and closed each and every after placing a layer of olives over the gold; and at the bottom of one of the bottles he laid the talisman. Then sat he down to talk with the gardener, confident of speedy reunion with his own people, and saying to himself, "When I come to the Ebony Islands I will journey thence to my father's country and enquire for my

1 Arab. "Amtár"; plur. of "Matr," a large vessel of leather or wood for water, etc.

2 Arab. "Asáfiri," so called because they attract sparrows (asáfir) a bird very fond of the ripe oily fruit. In the Romance of "Antar" Asáfir camels are beasts that fly like birds in fleetness. The reader must not confound the olives of the text with the hard unripe berries ("little plums pickled in stale") which appear at English tables; nor wonder that bread and olives are the beef-steak and potatoes of many Mediterranean peoples. It is an excellent diet, the highly oleaginous fruit supplying the necessary carbon.

beloved Budur. Would Heaven I knew whether she returned to her own land or journeyed on to my father's country, or whether there befell her any accident by the way." And he began versifying :—

Love in my breast they lit and fared away, * And far the land wherein my love is pent :
Far lies the camp and those who camp therein ; * Far is her tent-shrine where I ne'er shall tent.
Patience far fled me when from me they fled ; * Sleep failed mine eyes, endurance was forspent :
They left and with them left my every joy, * Wending with them, nor find I peace that went :
They made these eyes roll down love-tears in flood, * And lacking them these eyne with tears are drent.
When my triste spirit once again would see them, * When pine and expectation but augment,
In my heart's core their counterfeits I trace, * With love and yearning to behold their grace.

Then, while he awaited the end of the term of days, he told the gardener the tale of the birds and what had passed between them ; whereat the hearer wondered ; and they both lay down and slept till the morning. The gardener awoke sick and abode thus two days ; but on the third day his sickness increased on him, till they despaired of his life, and Kamar al-Zaman grieved with sore grief for him. Meanwhile, behold ! the Master and his crew came and enquired for the gardener ; and, when Kamar al-Zaman told them that he was sick, they asked, "Where be the youth who is minded to go with us to the Ebony Islands?" "He is your servant and he standeth before you !" answered the Prince, and bade them carry the bottles of olives to the ship ; so they transported them, saying, "Make haste, thou, for the wind is fair" ; and he replied, "I hear and obey." Then he carried his provant on board and returning to bid the gardener farewell found him in the agonies of death ; so he sat down at his head and closed his eyes, and his soul departed his body ; whereupon he laid him out and committed him to the earth unto the mercy of Allah Almighty. Then he made for the ship but found that she had already weighed anchor and set sail ; nor did she cease to cleave the seas till she disappeared from his sight. So he went back to whence he came heavy-hearted with whirling head ; and neither would he address a soul nor return a reply ; and reaching the garden, and sitting down in cark and care, he threw dust on his head and buffeted his cheeks.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the ship sped on her course, Kamar al-Zaman returned to the garden in cark and care; but anon he rented the place of its owner and hired a man to help him in irrigating the trees. Moreover, he repaired the trap-door and he went to the under-ground chamber, and bringing the rest of the gold to grass, stowed it in other fifty bottles which he filled up with a layer of olives. Then he enquired of the ship, and they told him that she sailed but once a year; whereat his trouble of mind redoubled and he cried sore for that which had betided him, above all for the loss of the Princess Budur's talisman, and spent his nights and days weeping and repeating verses. Such was his case; but as regards the ship she voyaged with a favouring wind till she reached the Ebony Islands. Now by decree of destiny Queen Budur was sitting at a lattice-window overlooking the sea, and saw the galley cast anchor upon the strand. At this sight her heart throbbed, and she took horse with the Chamberlains and Nabobs, and, riding down to the shore, halted by the ship, whilst the sailors broke bulk and bore the bales to the storehouses; after which she called the captain to her presence, and asked what he had with him. He answered, "O King, I have with me in this ship aromatic drugs and cosmetics and healing powders and ointments and plasters and precious metals and rich stuffs and rugs of Yamání leather, not to be borne of mule or camel, and all manner ottars and spices and perfumes, civet and ambergris and camphor and Sumatra aloes-wood, and tamarinds¹ and sparrow olives to boot, such as are rare to find in this country." When she heard talk of sparrow-olives her heart longed for them, and she said to the ship-master, "How much of olives hast thou?" He replied, "Fifty bottles full, but their owner is not with us; so the King shall take what he will of them." Quoth she, "Bring them ashore that I may see them." Thereupon he called to the sailors, who brought her the fifty bottles; and she opened one and, looking at the olives, said to the captain, "I will take the whole fifty and pay you their value whatso it be." He answered, "By Allah, O my lord! they have no value in our country moreover their shipper tarried behind us, and he is a poor man." Asked she, "And what are they worth here?" and he answered, "A thousand dirhams." "I will take them at a thousand," she said, and bade them carry the fifty bottles to the palace. When it was night, she called for a bottle of olives and opened it, there being none in the room but herself and the Princess Hayat al-Nufus. Then, placing a dish before her she turned into it the contents of the jar, when there fell out into the dish with the olives a heap of red gold; and she said to the Lady Hayat al-Nufus, "This is naught but gold!" So she sent for the rest of the bottles and found them all full of precious metal and scarce enough olives to fill a single jar. Moreover, she sought among the gold and found therein the talisman, which she took and examined, and behold! it was that which Kamar al-Zaman had taken from off the band of her petticoat trousers. Thereupon she cried out for joy, and slipped down in a swoon.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Tamar al-Hindi" = the "Indian-date," whence our word "Tamarind." A sherbet of the pods, being slightly laxative, is much drunk during the great heats; and the dried fruit made into small round cakes is sold in the bazars. The traveller is advised not to sleep under the tamarind's shade, which is infamous for causing ague and fever. In Sind I derided the "native nonsense," passed the night under an "Indian date-tree," and awoke with a fine specimen of ague which lasted me a week. The foliage is exceedingly dense and the cool shade condenses the night dew; hence the chill about the "small hours."

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when King Budur saw the talisman she cried out for joy and slipped down in a swoon; and when she recovered she said to herself, "Verily, this talisman was the cause of my separation from my beloved Kamar al-Zaman; but now it is an omen of good." Then she showed it to Hayat al-Nufus and said to her, "This was the cause of disunion and now, please Allah! it shall be the cause of reunion." As soon as day dawned she seated herself on the Royal throne and sent for the ship-master, who came into the presence and kissed ground before her. Quoth she, "Where didst thou leave the owner of these olives?" Quoth he, "O King of the Age, we left him in the land of the Magians and he is a gardener there." She rejoined, "Except thou bring him to me, thou knowest not the harm which awaiteth thee and thy ship." Then she bade them seal up the magazines of the merchants and said to them, "Verily the owner of these olives hath borrowed of me and I have a claim upon him for debt and, unless ye bring him to me, I will without fail do you all die and seize your goods." So they went to the captain and promised him the hire of the ship, if he would go and return a second time, saying, "Deliver us from this masterful tyrant." Accordingly the skipper embarked and set sail, and Allah decreed him a prosperous voyage till he came to the Island of the Magians and, landing by night, went up to the garden. Now the night was long upon Kamar al-Zaman, and he sat bethinking him of his beloved and bewailing what had befallen him, and versifying :—

A night whose stars refused to run their course, * A night of those which never seem outworn :

Like Resurrection-day, of longsome length¹ * To him that watched and waited for the morn.

Now at this moment the captain knocked at the garden-gate, and Kamar al-Zaman opened and went out to him, whereupon the crew seized him and went down with him on board the ship and set sail forthright ; and they ceased not voyaging days and nights, whilst Kamar al-Zaman knew not why they dealt thus with him ; but when he questioned them they replied, "Thou hast offended against the Lord of the Ebony Islands, the son-in-law of King Armanus, and thou hast stolen his moneys, miserable that thou art !" Said he, "By Allah ! I never entered that country, nor do I know where it is !" However, they fared on with him, till they made the Ebony Islands and landing, carried him up to the Lady Budur, who knew him at sight and said, "Leave him with the eunuchs, that they may take him to the bath." Then she relieved the merchants of the embargo and gave the captain a robe of honour worth ten thousand pieces of gold ; and, after returning to the palace, she went in that night to the Princess Hayat al-Nufus and told her what had passed, saying, "Keep thou my counsel till I accomplish my purpose, and do a deed which shall be recorded and shall be read by Kings and commoners after we be dead and gone." And when she gave orders that they bear Kamar al-Zaman to the bath they did so and clad him in a royal habit so that when he came forth he resembled a willow-bough or a star which shamed the greater and lesser light² and its glow, and his life and soul returned to his frame. Then he repaired to the palace and went in to the Princess Budur ; and when she saw him she schooled her heart to patience, till she should have accomplished her

¹ Moslems are not agreed on the length of the Day of Doom when all created things, marshalled by the angels, await final judgment ; the different periods named are 40 years, 70, 300, and 50,000. Yet the trial itself will last no longer than while one may milk an ewe, or than "the space between two milkings of a she-camel."

² Arab. "Al-Kamaráni," lit. "the two moons." Arab rhetoric prefers it to "Shamsáni," or "two suns," because lighter (akhaff) to pronounce. So, albeit Omar was less worthy than Abu-Bakr, the two are called "Al-Omaráni," in vulgar parlance, Omarayn.

purpose; and she bestowed on him Mamelukes and eunuchs, camels and mules. Moreover, she gave him a treasury of money, and she ceased not advancing him from dignity to dignity, till she made him Lord High Treasurer and committed to his charge all the treasures of the state; and she admitted him to familiar favour and acquainted the Emirs with his rank and dignity. And all loved him, for Queen Budur did not cease day by day to increase his allowances. As for Kamar al-Zaman, he was at a loss anent the reason of her thus honouring him; and he gave gifts and largesse out of the abundance of the wealth; and he devoted himself to the service of King Armanus; so that the King and all the Emirs and people, great and small, adored him and were wont to swear by his life. Nevertheless he ever marvelled at the honour and favour shown him by Queen Budur, and said to himself, "By Allah, there needs must be a reason for this affection! Peradventure, this King favoureth me not with these immoderate favours save for some ill purpose and, therefore, there is no help but that I crave leave of him to depart his realm." So he went in to Queen Budur and said to her, "O King, thou hast overwhelmed me with favours, but it will fulfil the measure of thy bounties an thou take from me all thou hast been pleased to bestow upon me, and permit me to depart." She smiled and asked, "What maketh thee seek to depart and plunge into new perils, whenas thou art in the enjoyment of the highest favour and greatest prosperity?" Answered Kamar al-Zaman, "O King, verily this favour, if there be no reason for it, is indeed a wonder of wonders, more by token that thou hast advanced me to dignities such as befit men of age and experience, albeit I am as it were a young child." And Queen Budur rejoined, "The reason is that I love thee for thine exceeding loveliness and thy surpassing beauty; and if thou wilt but grant me my desire of thy body, I will advance thee yet farther in honour and favour and largesse; and I will make thee Wazir, for all thy tender age, even as the folk made me Sultan over them and I no older than thou; so that nowadays there is nothing strange when children take the head and by Allah, he was a gifted man who said:—

It seems as though of Lot's tribe were our days, * And crave with love to advance the young in years.¹

When Kamar al-Zaman heard these words, he was abashed and ¹ Alluding to the angels who appeared to the Sodom folk in the shape of beautiful youths (Koran, xi.).

his cheeks flushed till they seemed a-flame ; and he said, " I need not these favours which lead to the commission of sin ; I will live poor in wealth, but wealthy in virtue and honour." Quoth she, " I am not to be duped by thy scruples, arising from prudery and coquettish ways ; and Allah bless him who saith :—

To him I spake of love-lesse, but he said to me, * "How long this noyous long persistency?"

But when gold piece I showed him, he cried, * "Who from the Almighty Sovereign c'er shall flee?"

Now when Kamar al-Zaman heard these words and understood her verses and their import, he said, "O king, I have not the habit of these doings, nor have I strength to bear these heavy burthens for which elder than I have proved unable ; then how will it be with my tender age?" But she smiled at his speech and retorted, "Indeed, it is a matter right marvellous, how error springeth from the disorder of man's intendment ! Since thou art a boy, why standest thou in fear of sin or the doing of things forbidden, seeing that thou art not yet come to years of canonical responsibility ; and the offences of a child incur neither punishment nor reproof? Verily, thou hast committed thyself to a quibble for the sake of contention, and it is thy duty to bow before a proposal of fruition, so henceforward cease from denial and coyness, for the commandment of Allah is a decree fore ordained¹: indeed, I have more reason than thou to fear falling and by sin to be misled." When Kamar al-Zaman heard these words, the light became darkness in his sight and he said, "O King, thou hast in thy household fair women and female slaves, who have not their like in this age: shall not these suffice thee without me? Do thy will with them and let me go!" She replied, "Thou sayest sooth, but it is not with them that one who loveth thee can heal himself of torment and can abate his fever ; for, when tastes and inclinations are corrupted by vice, they hear and obey other than good advice. So leave arguing and listen to what the poet saith :—

Seest not the bazar with its fruit in rows? * These men are for figs and for sycamore² those!

And what another saith :—

Many whose anklet-rings are dumb have tinkling belts, * And this hath all content while that for want must wail:

¹ Koran, xxxiii. 38.

² Arab. "Jamiz" (in Egypt "Jammayz") = the fruit of the true sycamore (F. Sycomorus) a magnificent tree which produces a small tasteless fig, eaten by the poorer classes in Egypt and by monkeys.

Thou bidd'st me be a fool and quit thee for her charms; * Allah for-fend I leave The Faith, turn Infidel!

And yet another:—

Even not beardless one with girl, nor heed * The spy who saith to thee
" 'Tis an amiss!"

Far different is the girl whose feet one kisses, * And that gazelle whose feet the earth must kiss.

When Kamar al-Zaman heard her quote this poetry, and was certified that there was no escaping compliance with what willed she, he said, "O King of the Age, if thou must needs have it so, make covenant with me that thou wilt do this thing with me but once, though it avail not to correct thy depraved appetite; and that thou wilt never again to the end of time; so perchance shall Allah purge the sin." She replied, "I promise thee this same, hoping that Allah of His favour will relent and blot out mortal offence; for the girdle of Heaven's forgiveness is not indeed so strait but it may compass us around and absolve us of the excess of our heinous sins and bring us to the light of salvation out of the darkness of error; and indeed excellently well saith the poet:—

Of evil thing the folk suspect us twain; * And to this thought their hearts and souls are bent:

Come, dear! let's justify and free their souls * That wrong us; one good bout and then—repent!¹"

Thereupon she made with him an agreement and a covenant and swore a solemn oath by Him who is Self-existent. So he rose up with her on this condition, and went with her to her own boudoir, saying, "There is no Majesty, and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! 'This is the fated decree of the All-powerful, the All-wise!' shameful and abashed, with the tears running from his eyes for stress of affright. Then loudly laughed Queen Budur till she fell on her back,² and said, "O my dearling,

1 A prolepsis of Tommy Moore:—

Your mother says, my little Venus,
There's something not quite right between us,
And you're in fault as much as I,
Now, on my soul, my little Venus,
I swear 'twould not be right between us,
To let your mother tell a lie.

But the Arab is more moral than Mr. Little, as he proposes to repent.

2 This is a mere phrase for our "dying of laughter"; the queen was on her back. And as Easterns sit on carpets, their falling back is very different from the same movement off a chair.

how quickly thou hast forgotten the nights we have lain together !” Then she made herself known to him, and he knew her for his wife, the Lady Budur, daughter of King Al-Ghayur, Lord of the Isles and the Seas. So he embraced her and she embraced him, and he kissed her and she kissed him; and they lay down on the bed of pleasure voluptuous, repeating the words of the poet :—

When his softly bending shape bid him close to my embrace * Which clipt him all about like the tendrils of the vine,
And shed a flood of softness on the hardness of his heart, * He yielded;
though at first he was minded to decline;
And dreading lest the railer’s eye should light upon his form, * Came armoured with caution to baffle his design;
His waist makes moan of hinder cheeks that weigh upon his feet * Like heavy load of merchandise upon young camel li’en; Girt with his glances’ scymitar which seemed athirst for blood, * And clad in mail of dusky curls that show the sheeniest shine, His fragrance wafted happy news of footstep coming nigh, * And to him like a bird uncaged I flew in straightest line:
I spread my cheek upon his path, beneath his sandal-shoon, * And lo !
the stibium¹ of their dust healed all my hurt of cyne.
With one embrace again I bound the banner of our loves,² * And loosed the knot of my delight was bound in bonds malign;
Then bade I make high festival, and straight came flocking in * Pure joys that know not grizzled age³ nor aught of pain and pine:
The full moon dotted with the stars the lips and pearly teeth * That dance right joyously upon the bubbling face of wine:
So in the prayer-niche of their joys I yielded me to what * Would make the humblest penitent of sinner most indign, I swear by all the wondrous signs⁴ of glories in his face * I’ll ne’er forget the Chapter entitled Al-Ikhlās.⁵

Then Queen Budur told Kamar al-Zaman all that had befallen her from beginning to end, and he did likewise; after which he began to upbraid her, saying, “What moved thee to deal with

¹ Arab. “Ismid,” the eye-powder before noticed.

² When the Caliph (e.g., Al-Tā’i li’l-lah) bound a banner to a spear and handed it to an officer, he thereby appointed him Sultan or Viceregent.

³ Arab. “Shāib al-inghāz” = lit. a gray beard who shakes head in disapproval.

⁴ Arab. “Ayāt” = the Hebr. “Ototh,” signs, wonders, or Koranic verses.

⁵ The Chapter “Al-Ikhlās,” i.e., clearing (one’s self from any faith but that of Unity) is No. cxlii. and runs thus—

Say, He is the One God !
The sempiternal God,
He begetteth not, nor is He begot,
And unto Him the like is not.

It is held to be equal in value to one-third of the Koran, and is daily used in prayer. Mr Rodwell makes it the tenth.

me as thou hast done this night?" She replied, "Pardon me for I did this by way of jest, and that pleasure and gladness might be increased." And when dawned the morn and day arose with its sheen and shone, she sent to King Armanus, sire of the Lady Hayat al-Nufus, and acquainted him with the truth of the case and that she was wife to Kamar al-Zaman. Moreover, she told him their tale and the cause of their separation, and how his daughter was a virgin, pure as when she was born. He marvelled at their story with exceeding marvel and bade them chronicle it in letters of gold. Then he turned to Kamar al-Zaman and said, "O King's son, art thou minded to become my son-in-law by marrying my daughter?" Replied he, "I must consult the Queen Budur, as she hath a claim upon me for benefits without stint." And when he took counsel with her, she said, "Right is thy recking; marry her and I will be her handmaid; for I am her debtor for kindness and favour, and good offices and obligations manifold, especially as we are here in her place and as the King her father hath whelmed us with benefits.¹" Now when he saw that she inclined to this and was not jealous of Hayat al-Nufus, he agreed with her upon this matter.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventeenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Kamar al-Zaman agreed with his wife, Queen Budur, upon this matter and told King Armanus what she had said; whereat he rejoiced with great joy. Then he went out and seating himself upon his chair of estate, assembled all the Wazirs, Emirs, Chamberlains and Grandees, to whom he related the whole story of Kamar al-Zaman and his wife, Queen Budur, from first to last; and acquainted them with his desire to marry his daughter Hayat al-Nufus to the Prince and make him King in the stead of Queen Budur. Whereupon said they all, "Since he is the husband of Queen Budur, who hath been our King till now, whilst we deemed her son-in-law to King Armanus, we are all content to have him to Sultan over us; and we will be his servants, nor will we swerve from his allegiance." So Armanus rejoiced hereat and summoning Kazis and witnesses and the chief officers of state, bade draw up the contract of marriage between Kamar al-Zaman and his daughter, the Princess Hayat al-Nufus. Then he held high festival, giving sumptuous marriage-feasts and bestowing costly dresses of honour upon all the Emirs and Captains of the host; moreover, he distributed alms to the poor and needy and set free all the prisoners. The whole world rejoiced in the coming of Kamar al-Zaman to the throne, blessing him and wishing him endurance of glory and prosperity, renown and felicity; and as soon as he became King he remitted the customs-dues and released all men who remained in gaol. Thus he abode a long while, ordering himself worthily towards his lieges; and he lived with his two wives in peace, happiness, constancy, and content, lying the night with each of them in turn. He ceased not after this fashion during many years, for indeed all his troubles and afflictions were blotted out from him, and he forgot his father King Shahrinan and his former estate of honour and favour with him. After awhile Almighty Allah blessed him with two boy children, as they were two shining moons, through his two wives; the elder whose name was Prince Amjad,¹ by Queen Budur, and the younger whose name was Prince As'ad, by Queen Hayat al-Nufus; and this one was comelier than his brother. They were reared in splendour and tender affection, in respectful bearing and in the perfection of training; and they were instructed in penmanship and science and the arts of government and horsemanship, till they attained the extreme of accomplishments and the utmost limit of beauty and loveliness, both men and women being ravished by their charms. They grew up side by side till they reached the age of seventeen, eating and drinking together and sleeping in one bed, nor ever parting at any time or tide; wherefore all the people envied them. Now when they came to man's estate and were endowed with every perfection, their father was wont, as often as he went on a journey, to make them sit in his stead by turns in the hall of judgment; and each did justice among the folk one day at a time. But it came to pass, by confirmed fate and determined lot, that love for As'ad (son of Queen Hayat al-Nufus) rose in the heart of Queen Budur, and that affection for Amjad (son of Queen Budur) rose in the heart of Queen Hayat al-Nufus.¹ Hence it was that each of the women used to sport and play with the son of her sister-wife, kissing him and straining him to her bosom, whilst each mother thought that the other's behaviour arose but from maternal affection. On this wise passion got the mastery of the two women's hearts, and they became madly in love with the two youths, so that when the other's son came in to either of them, she would press him to her breast and pine for him never to be parted from her; till, at last, when waiting grew longsome to them, and they found no path to enjoyment, they refused meat and drink and banished the solace of sleep. Presently, the King fared forth to course and chase, bidding his two sons sit to do justice in his stead, each one day in turn, as was their wont.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The Lady Budur shows her noble blood by not objecting to her friend becoming her Zarrah (sister-wife). This word is popularly derived from "Zarar"=injury; and is vulgarly pronounced in Egypt "Durrah," sounding like Durrah = a parrot (see Burckhardt's mistake in Prov. 314). The native proverb says, "Ayshat al-durrah murrah," the sister-wife hath a bitter life. We have no English equivalent; so I translate indifferently co-wife, co-consort, sister-wife, or sister in wedlock.

¹ Lane preserves the article "El-Amjad" and "El-As'ad"; which is as necessary as to say "the John" or "the James," because neo-Latins have "il Giovanni" or "il Giacomo." In this matter of the Arabic article, however, it is impossible to lay down a universal rule: in some cases it must be preserved and only practice in the language can teach its use. For instance, it is always present in Al-Bahrain and Al-Yaman; but not necessarily so with Irak and Najd.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King fared forth to sport and hunt, bidding his two sons sit to do justice in his stead, each one day by turn, as was their wont. Now Prince Amjad sat in judgment the first day, bidding and forbidding, appointing and deposing, giving and refusing; and Queen Hayat al-Nufus, mother of As'ad wrote to him a letter suing for his favour and discovering to him her passion and devotion; altogether putting off the mask and giving him to know that she desired to enjoy him. So she took a scroll and thereon indited these cadences:— From the love deranged * the sorrowful and estranged * whose torment is prolonged for the longing of thee! * Were I to recount to thee the extent of my care * and what of sadness I bear * the passion which my heart doth tear * and all that I endure for weeping and unrest * and the rending of my sorrowful breast * my unremitting grief * and my woe without relief * and all my suffering for severance of thee * and sadness and love's ardency * no letter could contain it; nor calculation could compass it * Indeed earth and heaven upon me are strait; and I have no hope and no trust but what from thee I await * Upon death I am come ¹ It is hard to say why this ugly episode was introduced. It is a mere false note in a tune pretty enough.

nigh * and the horrors of dissolution I aby * Burning upon me is sore * with parting pangs and estrangement galore * Were I to set forth the yearnings that possess me more and more * no scrolls would suffice to hold such store * and of the excess of my pain and pine I have made the following lines :—

Were I to dwell on heart-consuming heat, * Unease and transports in my spirit meet,
Nothing were left of ink and redden pen, * Nor aught of paper ; no, not e'en a sheet.

Then Queen Hayat al-Nufus wrapped up her letter in a piece of costly silk scented with musk and ambergris ; and having enfolded it with her silken hair-strings,¹ whose cost swallowed down treasures ; laid it in a kerchief and gave it to a eunuch, bidding him bear it to Prince Amjad. — And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Nineteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that she gave her missive to the eunuch in waiting, and bade him bear it to Prince Amjad. And that eunuch went forth ignoring what the future hid for him (for the Omniscient ordereth events even as He willeth) ; and, going in to the Prince, kissed ground between his hands and handed to him the letter. On receiving the kerchief he opened it and reading the epistle and recognising its gist, he was ware that his father's wife was essentially an adulteress and a traitress at heart to her husband King Kamar al-Zaman. So he waxed wroth with exceeding wrath and railed at women and their works, saying, "Allah curse women, the traitresses, the imperfect in reason and religion!" Then he drew his sword and said to the eunuch, "Out on thee, thou wicked slave ! Dost thou carry messages of disloyalty for thy lord's wife ? By Allah, there is no good in thee, O black of hue and heart, O foul of face and Nature's forming !" So he smote him on the neck and severed his head from his body ; then folding the kerchief over its contents he thrust it into his breast-pocket and went in to his own mother and told her what had passed, reviling and reproaching her, and saying, "Each one of you is viler than the other ; and, by Allah the Great and Glorious, did I not fear ill-manneredly to

¹ The significance of this action will presently appear.

² An "Hadis."

transgress against the rights of my father Kamar al-Zaman, and my brother Prince As'ad, I would assuredly go in to her and cut off her head, even as I cut off that of her eunuch!" Then he went forth from his mother in a mighty rage; and when the news reached Queen Hayat al-Nufus of what he had done with her eunuch, she abused him¹ and cursed him and plotted perfidy against him. He passed the night, sick with rage, wrath, and concern; nor found he pleasure in meat, drink or sleep. And when the next morning dawned Prince As'ad fared forth in his turn to rule the folk in his father's stead, whilst his mother, Hayat al-Nufus, awoke in feeble plight because of what she had heard from Prince Amjad concerning the slaughter of her eunuch. So Prince As'ad sat in the audience-chamber that day, judging and administering justice, appointing and deposing, bidding and forbidding, giving and bestowing. And he ceased not thus till near the time of afternoon-prayer, when Queen Budur sent for a crafty old woman and, discovering to her what was in her heart, wrote a letter to Prince As'ad, complaining of the excess of her affection and desire for him in these cadenced lines:—

"From her who perisheth for passion and love-forlorn * to him who in nature and culture is goodliest born * to him who is conceited of his own loveliness * and glories in his amorous grace * who from those that seek to enjoy him avorteth his face * and refuseth to show favour unto the self-abasing and base * him who is cruel and of disdainful mood * from the lover despairing of good * to Prince As'ad * with passing beauty endowed * and of excelling grace proud * of the face moon-bright * and the brow flower-white * and dazzling splendid light * This is my letter to him whose love melteth my body * and rendeth my skin and bones! * Know that my patience faileth me quite * and I am perplexed in my plight * longing and restlessness weary me * and sleep and patience deny themselves to me * but mourning and watching stick fast to me * and desire and passion torment me * and the extremes of languor and sickness have shent me * Yet may my life be a ransom for thee * albeit thy pleasure be to slay her who loveth thee * and Allah prolong the life of thee * and preserve thee from all infirmity!" And after these cadences she wrote these couplets:—

Fate hath commanded I become thy fere, * O shining like full moon when clearest clear!

¹ Arab "Sabb" = using the lowest language of abuse, chiefly concerning women relatives and their persons.

All beauty dost embrace, all eloquence; * Brighter than aught within our worldly sphere :

Content am I my torturer thou be: * Haply shalt alms me with one lovely leer !

Happy her death who dieth for thy love ! * No good in her who holdeth thee undear !

And also the following couplets:—

Unto thee, As'ad ! I of passion-pangs complain; * Have ruth on slave of love so burnt with flaming pain :

How long, I ask, shall hands of Love disport with me, * With longings, dour, sleepiness and bale and bane ?

Anon I 'plain of sea in heart, anon of fire * In vitals, O strange ease, dear wish, my fainest fain !

O blamer, cease thy blame, and seek thyself to fly * From Love, which makes these eyne a rill of tears to rain.

How oft I ery for absence and desire, Ah grief ! * But all my crying naught of gain for me shall gain :

Thy rigours dealt me sickness passing power to bear, * Thou art my only leach, assain me an thou deign !

O chider, chide me not in caution, for I doubt * That plaguey Love to thee shall also deal a bout.

Then Queen Budur perfumed the letter-paper with a profusion of odoriferous musk and, winding it in her hairstrings which were of Iráki silk, with pendants of oblong emeralds, set with pearls and stones of price, delivered it to the old woman, bidding her carry it to Prince As'ad.¹ She did so in order to pleasure her, and going in to the Prince, straightway and without stay, found him in his own rooms and delivered to him the letter in privacy; after which she stood waiting an hour or so for the answer. When As'ad had read the paper and knew its purport, he wrapped it up again in the ribbons and put it in his bosom-pocket: then (for he was wroth beyond all measure of wrath) he cursed false women, and sprang up and drawing his sword smote the old trot on the neck and cut off her pate. Thereupon he went in to his mother Queen Hayat al-Nufus, whom he found lying on her bed in feeble case, for that which had betided her with Prince Amjad, and railed at her and cursed her; after which he left her and for-gathered with his brother, to whom he related all that had befallen him with Queen Budur, adding, "By Allah, O my brother, but that I was ashamed before thee, I had gone in to her forthright and had smitten her head off her shoulders!" Replied Prince Amjad, "By Allah, O my brother, yesterday when I was sitting upon the seat of judgment, the like of what hath befallen thee this day befell me also with thy mother, who sent me a letter of similar purport." And he told him all that had passed, adding, "By Allah, O my brother, naught but respect for thee withheld me from going in to her and dealing with her even as I dealt with the eunuch!" They passed the rest of the night conversing and cursing false womankind, and agreeing to keep the matter secret, lest their father should hear of it and kill the two women. Yet they ceased not to suffer trouble and foresee affliction. And when the morrow dawned, the King returned with his suite from hunting and sat awhile in his chair of estate; after which he sent the Emirs about their business and went up to his palace, where he found his two wives lying a-bed and both exceeding sick and weak. Now they had made a plot against their two sons and concerted to do away their lives, for that they had exposed themselves before them and feared to be at their mercy and dependent upon their forbearance. When Kamar al-Zaman saw them on this wise, he said to them, "What aileth you?" Whereupon they rose to him and, kissing his hands, answered, perverting the case and saying, "Know, O King, that thy two sons, who have been reared in thy bounty, have played thee false and have dishonoured thee in the persons of thy wives." Now when he heard this, the light became darkness in his sight, and he raged with such wrath that his reason fled: then said he to them, "Explain me this matter." Replied Queen Budur, "O King of the Age, know that these many days past thy son As'ad hath been in the persistent habit of sending me letters and messages to solicit me to lewdness and adultery, while I still forbade him from this but he would not be forbidden; and when thou wentest forth to hunt he rushed in on me, drunk and with a drawn sword in his hand, and smiting my eunuch slew him. Then he seized hold of me, still holding the sword, and I feared lest he should slay me, if I gainsaid him, even as he had slain my eunuch; so he took his wicked will of me by force. And now if thou do me not justice on him, O King, I will slay myself with my own hand, for I have no need of life in the world after this foul deed." And Queen Hayat al-Nufus, choking with tears, told him respecting Prince Amjad a story like that of her sister-wife.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The reader will note in the narration concerning the two Queens the parallelism of the Arab's style, which recalls that of the Hebrew poets. Strings of black silk are plaited into the long locks (an "idiot-fringe" being worn over the brow) because a woman is cursed "who joineth her own hair to the hair of another" (especially human hair). Sending the bands is a sign of affectionate submission; and in extremest cases the hair itself is sent.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twentieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Queen Hayat al-Nufus told her husband King Kamar al-Zaman a story like that of her sister in wedlock, Budur, and quoth she, "The same thing befell me with thy son Amjad"; after which she took to weeping and wailing and said, "Except thou do me justice on him I will tell my father, King Armanus." Then both women wept with sore weeping before King Kamar al-Zaman who, when he saw their tears and heard their words, concluded that their story was true and waxing wroth beyond measure of wrath, went forth thinking to fall upon his two sons and put them to death. On his way he met his father-in-law King Armanus who, hearing of his return from the chase, had come to salute him at that very hour; and, seeing him with naked brand in hand and blood dripping from his nostrils for excess of rage, asked what ailed him. So Kamar al-Zaman told him all that his sons Amjad and As'ad had done, and added, "And here I am now going in to them to slay them in the foulest way, and make of them the most shameful of examples." Quoth King Armanus (and indeed he too was wrath with them), "Thou dost well, O my son, and may Allah not bless them nor any sons that do such deed against their father's honour. But, O my son, the sayer of the old saw saith:—Whoso looketh not to the end hath not Fortune to friend. In any case they are thy sons, and it befiteth not that thou kill them with thine own hand, lest thou drink of their death agony,¹ and anon repent of having slain them whereas repentance availeth thee naught. Rather do thou send them with one of thy Mamelukes into the desert, and let him kill them there out of thy sight, for, as saith the adage:—Out of sight of my friend is better and pleasanter."² And when Kamar al-Zaman heard his father-in-law's words, he knew them to be just; so he sheathed his sword and, turning back, sat down upon the throne of his realm. There he summoned his treasurer, a very old man, versed in affairs and in fortune's vicissitudes, to whom he said, "Go in to my sons, Amjad and As'ad; bind their hands behind them with strong bonds, lay them in two chests, and load them upon a mule. Then take horse thou and carry them into mid-desert, where do thou kill them both, and fill two vials with their blood and bring the same to me in haste."³

¹ i.e., suffer similar pain at the spectacle, a phrase often occurring.

² i.e., when the eye sees not, the heart grieves not.

Replied the treasurer, "I hear and I obey"; and he rose up hurriedly and went out forthright to see the Princes; and, on his road, he met them coming out of the palace-vestibule, for they had donned their best clothes and their richest; and they were on their way to salute their sire and give him joy of his safe return from his going forth to hunt. Now when he saw them he laid hands on them, saying, "O my sons, know ye that I am but a slave commanded, and that your father hath laid a commandment on me; will ye obey his commandment?" They said, "Yes"; whereupon he went up to them and after pinioning their arms, laid them in the chests which he loaded on the back of a mule he had taken from the city. And he ceased not carrying them into the open country till near noon, when he halted in a waste and desolate place and dismounting from his mare, let down the two chests from the mule's back. Then he opened them and took out Amjad and As'ad; and when he looked upon them he wept sore for their beauty and loveliness; then drawing his sword he said to them, "By Allah, O my lords! indeed it is hard for me to deal so evilly by you; but I am to be excused in this matter, being but a slave commanded, for that your father King Kamar al-Zaman hath bidden me strike off your heads." They replied, "O Emir, do the King's bidding, for we bear with patience that which Allah (to Whom be Honour, Might and Glory!) hath decreed to us; and thou art quit of our blood." Then they embraced and bade each other farewell, and As'ad said to the treasurer, "Allah upon thee, O uncle! spare me the sight of my brother's death-agony, and make me not drink of his anguish, but kill me first, for that were the easier for me." And Amjad said the like and entreated the treasurer to kill him before As'ad, saying, "My brother is younger than I, so make me not taste of his anguish." And they both wept bitter tears whilst the treasurer wept for their weeping.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the treasurer wept for their weeping; then the two brothers embraced and bade farewell, and one said to the other, "All this cometh of the malice of those traitresses, my mother and thy mother; and this is the reward of my forbearance towards thy mother and of thy forbearance towards my mother! But there is no Might and there is no Majesty save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! Verily, we are Allah's and unto Him we are returning.¹" And As'ad embraced his brother, sobbing and repeating these couplets:—

O Thou to whom sad trembling wights in fear complain! * O ever ready whatso cometh to sustain!

The sole resource for me is at Thy door to knock; * At whose door knock an Thou to open wilt not deign?

O Thou whose grace is treasured in the one word, Be²! * Favour me, I beseech, in Thee all weals contain.

Now when Amjad heard his brother's weeping he wept also and pressing him to his bosom, repeated these two couplets:—

O Thou whose boons to me are more than one! * Whose gifts and favours have nor count nor bound!

No stroke of Fortune's strokes e'er fell on me, * But Thee to take me by the hand I found.

Then said Amjad to the treasurer, "I conjure thee by the One, the Omnipotent, the Lord of Mercy, the Beneficent! slay me before my brother As'ad, so haply shall the fire be quencht in my heart's core and in this life burn no more." But As'ad wept and exclaimed, "Not so; I will die first"; whereupon quoth Amjad, "It were best that I embrace thee and thou embrace me, so the sword may fall upon us and slay us both at a single stroke." Thereupon they embraced face to face, and clung to each other straitly, whilst the treasurer tied up the twain and bound them fast with cords, weeping the while. Then he drew his blade and said to them, "By Allah, O my lords, it is indeed hard to me to slay you! But have ye no last wishes that I may fulfil, or charges which I may carry out or message which I may deliver?" Replied Amjad, "We have no wish; and my only charge to thee is that thou set my brother below and me above him, that the blow may fall on me first; and when thou hast killed us and returnest to the King and he asketh thee:—What heardest thou from them before their death? do thou answer:—Verily thy sons salute thee and say to thee, Thou knewest not if we were innocent or guilty, yet hast thou put us to death and

¹ i.e., unto Him we shall return, a sentence recurring in almost every longer chapter of the Koran.

² Arab. "Kun," the creative Word (which, by-the-by, proves the Koran to be an uncreated Logos); the full sentence being "Kun fa kana"=Be! and it became. The origin is evidently, "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light" (Gen. i. 3); a line grand in its simplicity and evidently borrowed from the Egyptians; even as Yahveh (Jehovah) from "Ankh"=Ilo who lives (Brugsch Hist. ii. 34).

Replied the treasurer, "I hear and I obey"; and he rose up hurriedly and went out forthright to see the Princes; and, on his road, he met them coming out of the palace-vestibule, for they had donned their best clothes and their richest; and they were on their way to salute their sire and give him joy of his safe return from his going forth to hunt. Now when he saw them he laid hands on them, saying, "O my sons, know ye that I am but a slave commanded, and that your father hath laid a commandment on me; will ye obey his commandment?" They said, "Yes"; whereupon he went up to them and after pinioning their arms, laid them in the chests which he loaded on the back of a mule he had taken from the city. And he ceased not carrying them into the open country till near noon, when he halted in a waste and desolate place and dismounting from his mare, let down the two chests from the mule's back. Then he opened them and took out Amjad and As'ad; and when he looked upon them he wept sore for their beauty and loveliness; then drawing his sword he said to them, "By Allah, O my lords! indeed it is hard for me to deal so evilly by you; but I am to be excused in this matter, being but a slave commanded, for that your father King Kamar al-Zaman hath bidden me strike off your heads." They replied, "O Emir, do the King's bidding, for we bear with patience that which Allah (to Whom be Honour, Might and Glory!) hath decreed to us; and thou art quit of our blood." Then they embraced and bade each other farewell, and As'ad said to the treasurer, "Allah upon thee, O uncle! spare me the sight of my brother's death-agony, and make me not drink of his anguish, but kill me first, for that were the easier for me." And Amjad said the like and entreated the treasurer to kill him before As'ad, saying, "My brother is younger than I, so make me not taste of his anguish." And they both wept bitter tears whilst the treasurer wept for their weeping.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the treasurer wept for their weeping; then the two brothers embraced and bade farewell, and one said to the other, "All this cometh of the malice of those traitresses, my mother and thy mother; and this is the reward of my forbearance towards thy mother and of thy forbearance towards my mother! But there is no Might and there is no Majesty save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! Verily, we are Allah's and unto Him we are returning.¹" And As'ad embraced his brother, sobbing and repeating these couplets:—

O Thou to whom sad trembling wights in fear complain! * O ever ready whatso cometh to sustain!

The sole resource for me is at Thy door to knock; * At whose door knock an Thou to open wilt not deign?

O Thou whose grace is treasured in the one word, Be²! * Favour me, I beseech, in Thee all weals contain.

Now when Amjad heard his brother's weeping he wept also and pressing him to his bosom, repeated these two couplets:—

O Thou whose boons to me are more than one! * Whose gifts and favours have nor count nor bound!

No stroke of Fortune's strokes e'er fell on me, * But Thee to take me by the hand I found.

Then said Amjad to the treasurer, "I conjure thee by the One, the Omnipotent, the Lord of Mercy, the Beneficent! slay me before my brother As'ad, so haply shall the fire be quencht in my heart's core and in this life burn no more." But As'ad wept and exclaimed, "Not so; I will die first"; whereupon quoth Amjad, "It were best that I embrace thee and thou embrace me, so the sword may fall upon us and slay us both at a single stroke." Thereupon they embraced face to face, and clung to each other straitly, whilst the treasurer tied up the twain and bound them fast with cords, weeping the while. Then he drew his blade and said to them, "By Allah, O my lords, it is indeed hard to me to slay you! But have ye no last wishes that I may fulfil, or charges which I may carry out or message which I may deliver?" Replied Amjad, "We have no wish; and my only charge to thee is that thou set my brother below and me above him, that the blow may fall on me first; and when thou hast killed us and returnest to the King and he asketh thee:—What heardest thou from them before their death? do thou answer:—Verily thy sons salute thee and say to thee, Thou knewest not if we were innocent or guilty, yet hast thou put us to death and hast not certified thyself of our sin nor looked into our case. Then do thou repeat to him these two couplets:—

¹ i.e., unto Him we shall return, a sentence recurring in almost every longer chapter of the Koran.

² Arab. "Kun," the creative Word (which, by-the-by, proves the Koran to be an uncreated Logos); the full sentence being "Kun fa kana"=Be! and it became. The origin is evidently, "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light" (Gen. i. 3); a line grand in its simplicity and evidently borrowed from the Egyptians; even as Yahveh (Jehovah) from "Ankh"=He who lives (Brugsch Hist. ii. 34).

Women are Satans made for woe o' men; I fly to Allah from their devilish scathe:

Source of whatever bale befell our kind, * In worldly matters and in things of Faith."

Continued Amjad, "We desire of thee naught but that thou repeat to our sire these two couplets"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me O auspicious King, that Amjad added, speaking to the treasurer, "We desire of thee naught but that thou repeat to our sire these two couplets which thou hast just now heard; and I conjure thee by Allah to have patience with us, whilst I cite to my brother this other pair of couplets." Then he wept with sore weeping and began:—

The Kings who fared before us showed * Of instances full many a show:

Of great and small and high and low * How many this one road have trod!

Now when the treasurer heard these words from Amjad, he wept till his beard was wet, whilst As'ad's eyes brimmed with tears and he in turn repeated these couplets:—

Fate frights us when the thing is past and gone; * Weeping is not for form or face alone¹:

What ails the Nights²? Allah blot out our sin, * And be the Nights by other hand undone!

Ere this Zubayr-son³ felt their spiteful hate, * Who fled for refuge to the House and Stone:

Would that when Khárijah was for Amru slain⁴ * They had ransomed Ali with all men they own.

¹ But also for the life and the so-called "soul."

² Arab. "Layáli" = lit. nights which, I have said, is often applied to the whole twenty-four hours. Here it is used in the sense of "fortune" or "fate"; like "days" and "days and nights."

³ Abdullah ibn al-Zubayr, a nephew of Ayishah, who had rebuilt the Ka'abah in A.H. 64 (A.D. 683), revolted (A.D. 680) against Yazid, and was proclaimed Caliph at Meccah. He was afterwards killed (A.D. 692) by the famous or infamous Hajjáj, general of Abd al-Malik bin Marwan, the fifth Ommiade, surnamed "Sweat of a stone" (skin-flint) and "Father of Flies," from his foul breath. See my Pilgrimage, etc., iii, 192-194, where are explained the allusions to the Ka'abah and the holy Black Stone.

⁴ These lines are part of an elegy composed in the twelfth century by Ibn Abduu al-Andalusí on the downfall of one of the Moslem dynasties in Spain.

Then with cheeks stained by tears down railing he recited also these verses:—

In sooth the Nights and Days are charactered * By traitor falsehood and as knaves they lie;
The Desert-reek¹ recalls their teeth that shine; * All horrid blackness is their Kohl of eye
My sin anent the world which I abhor * Is sin of sword when sworders fighting hie.

Then his sobs waxed louder, and he said:—

O thou who woo'st a world² unworthy, learn * 'Tis house of evils, 'tis Perdition's net:
A house where whoso laughs this day shall weep * The next: then perish house of fume and fret Endless its frays and forays, and its thralls * Are ne'er redeemed, while endless risks beset.
How many gloried in its pomps and pride, * Till proud and pompous did all bounds forget, Then showing back of shield she made them swill³ * Full draught, and claimèd all her vengeance debt.
For know her strokes fall swift and sure, altho' * Long bide she and forslow the course of Fate:
So look thou to thy days ere life go by * Idly, and meet thou more than thou hast met;
And eut all chains of world-love and desire * And save thy soul and rise to secrets higher.

Now when As'ad made an end of these verses, he strained his brother Amjad in his arms till they twain were one body, and the treasurer, drawing his sword, was about to strike them, when behold, his steed took fright at the wind of his upraised hand, and breaking its tether, fled into the desert. Now the horse had cost a thousand gold pieces, and on its back was a splendid saddle worth much money; so the treasurer threw down his sword and

The allusion is to the famous conspiracy of the Khárijites (the first sectarians in Mohammedanism) to kill Ali, Mu'awiyah, and Amru (so written but pronounced "Amr") al-As, in order to abate intestine feuds in Al-Islam. Ali was slain with a sword-cut by Ibn Muljam, a name ever damnable amongst the Persians; Mu'awiyah escaped with a wound, and Kharijah, the Chief of Police at Fustat or old Cairo, was murdered by mistake for Amru. After this the sectarian wars began.

¹ Arab. "Saráb"=(Koran, chapt. xxiv.) the reek of the Desert, before explained. It is called "Lama," the shine, the loom, in Al-Hariri. The world is compared with the mirage, the painted eye, and the sword that breaks in the sworder's hand.

² Arab. "Dunyá," with the common alliteration "dáníyah"=(Pers. "dún"), in prose as well as poetry means the things or fortune of this life opp. to "Akhirah"=future life ran after his beast.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

³ Arab. "Walgh," a strong expression primarily denoting the lapping of dogs; here and elsewhere "to swill, saufen."

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when his horse ran away the treasurer ran after it in huge concern, and ceased not running to catch the runaway till it entered a thicket. He followed it whilst it dashed through the wood, smiting the earth with its hoofs till it raised a dust-cloud which towered high in air; and snorting and puffing and neighing and waxing fierce and furious. Now there happened to be in this thicket a lion of terrible might; hideous to sight, with eyes sparkling light; his look was grim and his aspect struck fright into man's sprite. Presently the treasurer turned and saw the lion making towards him; but found no way of escape nor had he his sword with him. So he said in himself, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! This strait is come upon me for no other cause but because of Amjad and As'ad; and indeed this journey was unblest from the first!" Meanwhile the two Princes were grievously oppressed by the heat and grew sore athirst, so that their tongues hung out and they cried for succour, but none came to their relief, and they said, "Would to Heaven we had been slain and were at peace from this pain! But we know not whither the horse hath fled, that the treasurer is gone and hath left us thus pinioned. If he would but come back and do us die, it were easier to us than this torture to aby." Said As'ad, "O my brother, be patient, and the relief of Allah (extolled and exalted be He!) shall assuredly come to us; for the horse started not away save of His favour towards us, and naught irketh us but this thirst." Upon this he stretched and shook himself, and strained right and left till he burst his pinion-bonds; then he rose and unbound his brother and, catching up the Emir's sword, said, "By Allah! we will not go hence, till we look after him and learn what is become of him." Then they took to following on the trail till it led them to the thicket, and they said each to other, "Of a surety, the horse and the treasurer have not passed out of this wood." Quoth As'ad, "Stay thou here, whilst I enter the thicket and search it"; and Amjad replied, "I will not let thee go in alone; nor will we enter it but together, so if we escape, we shall escape together, and if we perish, we shall perish together." Accordingly both entered and found that the lion had sprung upon the treasurer, who lay like a sparrow in his grip, calling upon Allah for aid, and signing with his hands to Heaven. Now when Amjad saw this, he took the sword and rushing upon the lion, smote him between the eyes and laid him dead on the ground. The Emir jumped up, marvelling at this escape, and seeing Amjad and As'ad, his master's sons, standing there, cast himself at their feet, and exclaimed, "By Allah, O my lords! it were intolerable wrong in me to do you to death. May the man never be who would kill you! Indeed, with my very life, I will ransom you"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the treasurer to Amjad and As'ad, "With my life will I ransom you both!" Then he hastily rose, and at once embracing them, enquired how they had loosed their bonds and come thither; whereupon they told him how the bonds of one of them had fallen loose and he had unbound the other, whereto they were helped by the purity of their intentions, and how they had tracked his trail till they came upon him. So he thanked them for their deed and went with them forth of the thicket; and when they were in the open country they said to him, "O uncle, do our father's bidding." He replied, "Allah forbid that I should draw near to you with hurt! But know ye that I mean to take your clothes and clothe you with mine; then will I fill two vials with the lion's blood and go back to the King and tell him I have put you to death. But as for you two, fare ye forth into the lands, for Allah's earth is wide; and know, O my lords, that it paineth me to part from you." At this, they all fell a-weeping; then the two youths put off their clothes and the treasurer habited them with his own. Moreover, he made two parcels of their dress and filling two vials with the lion's blood, set the parcels before him on his horse's back. Presently he took leave of them and making his way to the city, ceased not faring till he went in to King Kamar al-Zaman and kissed ground between his hands. The King saw him changed in face and troubled (which arose from his adventure with the lion) and, deeming this came of the slaughter of his two sons, rejoiced and said to him, "Hast thou done the work?" "Yes, O our lord," replied the treasurer and gave him the two parcels of clothes and the two vials full of blood. Asked the King, "What didst thou observe in them; and did they give thee any charge?" Answered the treasurer, "I found them patient and resigned to what came down upon them and they said to me:—Verily, our father is excusable; bear him our salutation and say to him, Thou art quit of our killing. But we charge thee repeat to him these couplets:—

Verily women are devils created for us. We seek refuge with God from the artifice of the devils.

They are the source of all the misfortunes that have appeared among mankind in the affairs of the world and of religion.¹

When the King heard these words of the treasurer, he bowed his head earth-wards a long while, and knew his sons' words to mean that they had been wrongfully put to death. Then he bethought himself of the perfidy of women and the calamities brought about by them; and he took the two parcels and opened them and fell to turning over his sons' clothes and weeping,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when King Kamar al-Zaman opened the two bundles and fell to turning over his sons' clothes and weeping, it so came to pass that he found, in the pocket of his son As'ad's raiment, a letter in the hand of his wife enclosing her hair-strings; so he opened and read it and understanding the contents knew that the Prince had been falsely accused and wrongously. Then he searched Amjad's parcel of dress and found in his pocket a letter in the handwriting of Queen Hayat al-Nufus, enclosing also her hair-strings; so he opened and read it and knew that Amjad too had been wronged; whereupon he beat hand upon hand and exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! I have slain my sons unjustly." And he buffeted his face, crying out, "Alas, my sons! Alas, my long grief!" Then he bade them build two tombs in one house, which he styled "House of Lamentations," and had graved thereon his sons' names; and he threw himself on Amjad's tomb, weeping and groaning and lamenting, and improvised these couplets:—

¹ The lines are repeated from vol. iii. night ccxxi. I give Lane's version (ii. 162) by way of contrast and—warning

O moon for ever set this earth below, * Whose loss bewail the stars which stud the sky!
O wand, which broken, ne'er with bend and wave * Shall fascinate the ravisht gazer's eye;
These eyne for jealousy I 'reft of thee * Nor shall they till next life thy sight desery:
I'm drowned in sea of tears for insomny, * Wherefore, indeed, in Sâhirah-stead¹ I lie.

Then he threw himself on As'ad's tomb, groaning and weeping and lamenting and versifying with these couplets:—

Indeed I longed to share unweal with thee, * But Allah than my will willed otherwise:
My grief all blackens 'twixt mine eyes and space, * Yet whitens all the blackness from mine eyes²:
Of tears they weep these eyne run never dry, * And ulcerous flow in vitals never dries:
Right sore it irks me seeing thee in stead³ * Where slave with sovran for once levelled lies.

And his weeping and wailing redoubled; and after he had ended his lamentations and his verse, he forsook his friends and intimates and denying himself to his women and his family, cut himself off from the world in the House of Lamentations, where he passed his time in weeping for his sons. Such was his case; but as regards Amjad and As'ad they fared on into the desert eating of the fruits of the earth and drinking of the remnants of the rain for a full month, till their travel brought them to a mountain of black flint⁴ whose further end was unknown; and here the road forked, one line lying along the midway height and the other leading to its head. They took the way trending to the top, and gave not over following it five days, but saw no end to it and were overcome with weariness, being unused to walking upon the mountains or elsewhere.⁵ At last, despairing of coming to the last of the road, they retraced their steps and taking the other, that led over the

1 "Sâhirah" is the place where human souls will be gathered on Doom-day; some understand by it the Hell Sa'ir (No. iv.) intended for the Sabians or the Devils generally.

2 His eyes are faded like Jacob's which, after weeping for Joseph, "became white with mourning" (Koran, chapt. xxi.). It is a stock comparison.

3 The grave.

4 Arab. "Sawwân" (popularly pronounced Suwân) = "Syenite" from Syrene; generally applied to siliceous granite, or any hard stone.

5 A proceeding fit only for thieves and paupers; "Alpinism" was then unknown. "You come from the mountain" (Al-Jabal) means, "You are a clod-hopper"; and "I will sit upon the mountain" = turn anchorite or magician. (Pilgrimage, i. 106.)

midway heights,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Princes Amjad and As'ad returned from the path leading to the Mountain-head and took that which ran along the midway heights, and walked through all that day till nightfall, when As'ad, weary with much travel, said to Amjad, "O my brother, I can walk no farther for I am exceeding weak." Replied Amjad, "O my brother, take courage! May be Allah will send us relief." So they walked on part of the night till the darkness closed in upon them, when As'ad became weary beyond measure of weariness, and cried out, "O my brother, I am worn out and spent with walking," and threw himself upon the ground and wept. Amjad took him in his arms and walked on with him, bytimes sitting down to rest till break of day, when they came to the mountain-top and found there a stream of running water and by it a pomegranate-tree and a prayer-niche.¹ They could hardly believe their eyes when they saw it; but, sitting down by that spring, drank of its water and ate of the fruit of that granado-tree; after which they lay on the ground and slept till sunrise, when they washed and bathed in the spring and, eating of the pomegranates, slept again till the time of mid-afternoon prayer. Then they thought to continue their journey, but As'ad could not walk, for both his feet were swollen. So they abode there three days till they were rested, after which they set out again and fared on over the mountain days and nights, tortured by and like to die of thirst till they sighted a city gleaming afar off, whereat they rejoiced and made towards it. When they drew near, they thanked Allah (be His Name exalted!), and Amjad said to As'ad, "O my brother, sit here, whilst I go to yonder city and see what it is and whose it is and where we are in Allah's wide world, that we may know through what lands we have passed in crossing this mountain, whose skirts had we followed we had not reached this city in a whole year. So praised be Allah for safety!" Replied As'ad, "By Allah, O my brother! none shall go down into that city save myself, and may I be thy ransom! If thou leave me alone be it only for an hour, I shall imagine a thousand things and be drowned in a torrent of anxiety on thine account, for I cannot brook thine absence from me." Amjad rejoined, "Go, then, and tarry not." So As'ad took some gold pieces and leaving his brother to await him, descended the mountain and ceased not faring on till he entered the city. As he threaded the streets he was met by an old man, age-decrepit, whose beard flowed down upon his breast and forked in twain¹; he bore a walking-staff in his hand and was richly clad, with a great red turband on his head. When As'ad saw him, he wondered at his dress and his mien; nevertheless, he went up to him and saluting him said, "Where be the way to the market, O my master?" Hearing these words the Shaykh smiled in his face and replied, "O my son, meseemeth thou art a stranger?" As'ad rejoined, "Yes, I am a stranger."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Corresponding with wayside chapels in Catholic countries. The Moslem form would be either a wall with a prayer-niche (Mihráb) fronting Meccah-wards, or a small domed room. These little oratories are often found near fountains, streams, or tree-clumps, where travellers would be likely to alight. I have described one in Sind ("Scinde, or the Unhappy Valley" i. 79); and have noted that scrawling on the walls is even more common in the East than in the West; witness the monuments of old Egypt bescribbled by the Greeks and Romans. Even the paws of the Sphinx are covered with such graffiti; and those of Ipsambul or Abu Simbal have proved treasures to epigraphists.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Shaykh who met As'ad smiled in his face and said to him, "O my son, meseemeth thou art a stranger?" and As'ad replied, "Yes, I am a stranger." Then rejoined the old man, "Verily, thou gladdenest our country with thy presence, O my son, and thou desolatest thine own land by reason of thine absence. What wantest thou of the market?" Quoth As'ad, "O uncle, I have a brother with whom I have come from a far country and with whom I have journeyed these three months; and when we sighted this city I left him, who is my elder brother, upon the mountain and came hither, purposing to buy victual and what else, and return therewith to him, that we might feed thereon." Said the old man, "Rejoice in all good, O my son, and know thou that to-day I give a marriage-feast, to which I have bidden many guests, and I have made ready plenty of meats, the best and most delicious that heart can desire. So if thou wilt come with me to my place, I will give thee freely all thou lackest without asking thee a price or aught else. Moreover, I will teach thee the ways of this city; and, praised be Allah, O my son! that I, and none other have happened upon thee." "As thou wilt," answered As'ad, "do as thou art disposed, but make haste, for indeed my brother awaiteth me and his whole heart is with me." The old man took As'ad by the hand and carried him to a narrow lane, smiling in his face and saying, "Glory be to Him who hath delivered thee from the people of this city!" And he ceased not walking till he entered a spacious house, wherein was a saloon and, behold! in the middle of it were forty old men, well stricken in years, collected together and forming a single ring as they sat round about a lighted fire, to which they were doing worship and prostrating themselves.¹ When As'ad saw this he was confounded, and the hair of his body stood on end though he knew not what they were; and the Shaykh said to them, "O Elders of the Fire, how blessed is this day!" Then he called aloud, saying, "Hallo, Ghazbán!" Whereupon there came out to him a tall black slave of frightful aspect, grim-visaged, and flat-nosed as an ape, who, when the old man made a sign to him, bent As'ad's arms behind his back and pinioned them; after which the Shaykh said to him, "Let him down into the vault under the earth and there leave him, and say to my slave-girl, Such-an-one:—Torture him night and day and give him a cake of bread to eat morning and evening against the time come of the voyage to the Blue Sea and the Mountain of Fire, whereupon we will slaughter him as a sacrifice." So the black carried him out at another door and, raising a flag in the floor, discovered a flight of twenty steps leading to a chamber² under the earth, into which he descended with him and, laying his feet in irons, gave him over to the slave-girl and went away. Meanwhile, the old men said to one another, "When the day of the Festival of the Fire cometh, we will sacrifice him on the mountain as a propitiatory offering whereby we shall pleasure the Fire." Presently the damsel went down to him and beat him a grievous beating till streams

¹ In tales this characterises a Persian; and Hero Rustam is always so pictured.

1 The Parsis, who are the representatives of the old Guebres, turn towards the sun and the fire as their Kiblah or point of prayer; all deny that they worship it. But, as in the case of saints' images, while the educated would pray before them for edification (Latria), the ignorant would adore them (Dulia); and would make scanty difference between the "reverence of a servant" and the "reverence of a slave." The human sacrifice was quite contrary to Guebre, although not to Hindu, custom; although hate and vengeance might prompt an occasional murder.

2 These oubliettes are common in old eastern houses as in the mediæval Castles of Europe, and many a stranger has met his death in them. They are often so well concealed that even the modern inmates are not aware of their existence.

No. 19.

Tale of Kamar al-Zaman.

“Wherein was a saloon and, behold! in the middle of it there were forty old men, well stricken in years, collected together and forming a single ring as they sat round about a lighted fire to which they were doing worship and prostrating themselves.”

of blood flowed from his sides and he fainted; after which she set at his head a scone of bread and a cruse of brackish water and went away and left him. In the middle of the night, he revived and found himself bound and beaten and sore with beating: so he wept bitter tears; and recalling his former condition of honour and prosperity, lordship and dominion, and his separation from his sire and his exile from his native land—— And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, than when As'ad found himself bound and beaten and sore with beating he recalled his whilome condition of honour and prosperity and dominion and lordship, and he wept and groaned aloud and recited these couplets:—

Stand by the ruined stead and ask of us; * Nor deem we dwell there as was state of us :

The World, that parter, hath departed us; * Yet soothes not hate-full hearts the fate of us :

With whips a cursèd slave-girl scourges us, * And teems her breast with rancorous hate of us :

Allah shall haply deign to unpart our lives, * Chastise our foes, and end this strait of us.

And when As'ad had spoken his poetry he put forth his hand towards his head and finding there the crust and the cruse full of brackish water, he ate a bittock, just enough to keep life in him, and drank a little water, but could get no sleep till morning for the swarms of bugs¹ and lice. As soon as it was day the slave-girl came down to him and changed his clothes, which were drenched with blood and stuck to him, so that his skin came off with the shirt; wherefore he shrieked aloud and cried, "Alas!" and said, "O my God, if this be Thy pleasure, increase it upon me! O Lord, verily Thou art not unminded of him that oppresseth me; do Thou, then, avenge me upon him!" And he groaned and repeated the following verses:—

¹ Arab. "Bakk"; hence our "bug," whose derivation (like that of "cat," "dog" and "hog") is apparently unknown to the dictionaries, always excepting M. Littré's. The Cimex is a native of Central Africa which passed over to America with the slave-trade, and thence was brought to Europe in timber. In England it was little known before the rebuilding of London after the Great Fire (1666).

Patient, O Allah! to Thy destiny * I bow, suffice me what Thou deign decree:

Patient to bear Thy will, O Lord of me, * Patient to burn on coals of Ghazá-tree:

They wrong me, visit me with hurt and harm; * Haply Thy grace from them shall set me free:

Far be't, O Lord, from Thee to spare the wronger, * O Lord of Destiny, my hope's in Thee!

And what another saith:—

Bethink thee not of worldly state, * Leave everything to course of Fate;

For oft a thing that irketh thee * Shall in content eventuate;
And oft what strait is shall expand, * And what expanded is wax strait.
Allah will do what wills His will, * So be not thou importunate!

But 'joy the view of coming weal * Shall make forget past bale and bate.

And when he had ended his verse, the slave-girl came down upon him with blows till he fainted again: and, throwing him a flap of bread and a gugglet of saltish water, went away and left him sad and lonely, bound in chains of iron, with the blood streaming from his sides and far from those he loved. So he wept, and called to mind his brother and the honours he erst enjoyed,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Twenty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that As'ad called to mind his brother and the honours he erst enjoyed; so he wept and groaned and complained and poured forth tears in floods and improvised these couplets:—

Easy, O Fate! how long this wrong, this injury, * Robbing each morn and eve my brotherhood fro' me?

Is't not time now thou deem this length sufficiency * Of woes and, O thou Heart of Rock, show clemency?

My friends thou wrongedst when thou madst each enemy * Mock and exult me for thy wrongs, thy tyranny:

My foeman's heart is solaced by the things he saw * In me, of stranger-hood and lonely misery:

Suffice thee not what came upon my head of dole, * Friends lost for evermore, eyes wan and pale of blee?

But must in prison east so narrow there is naught * Save hand to bite, with bitten hand for company;

And tears that tempest down like goodly gift of cloud, * And longing thirst whose fires weet no satiety.
Regretful yearnings, singulfs and uneeasing sighs, * Repine, remembrance, and pain's very ecstasy :
Desire I suffer sore, and melaneholy deep, * And I must bide a prey to endless phrenesy :
I find me ne'er a friend who looks with piteous eye, * And seeks my presence to allay my misery :
Say, liveth any intimate with trusty love * Who for mine ills will groan, my sleepless malady ?
To whom moan I can make, and peradventure, he * Shall pity eyes that sight of sleep can never see ?
The flea and bug suck up my blood, as wight that drinks * Wine from the proffering hand of fair virginity :
Amid the lice my body aye remindeth me * Of orphan's good in Kázi's elaw of villainy :
My home's a sepulchre that measures eubits three, * Where pass I morn and eve in chainèd agony :
My wines are tears, my clank of chains takes music's stead ; * Cares my dessert of fruit and sorrows are my bed.

And when he had versed his verse and had prosed his prose, he again groaned and complained and remembered what he had been and how he had been parted from his brother. Thus far concerning him ; but as regards his brother Amjad, he awaited As'ad till mid-day yet he returned not to him : whereupon Amjad's vitals fluttered, the pangs of parting were sore upon him, and he poured forth abundant tears,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirtieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Amjad awaited his brother As'ad till mid-day and he returned not to him, Amjad's vitals fluttered ; the pangs of parting were sore upon him, and he poured forth abundant tears, exclaiming, " Alas, my brother ! Alas, my friend ! Alas my grief ! How I feared me we should be separated ! " Then he descended from the mountain-top with the tears running down his cheeks ; and, entering the city, ceased not walking till he made the market. He asked the folk the name of the place and concerning its people and they said, " This is called the City of the Magians, and its ciuzens are mostly given to Fire-worshipping in lieu of the Omnipotent King." Then he enquired of the City of Ebony and they answered, " Of a truth it is a year's journey thither by land and six months by sea: it was governed erst by a King called Armanus; but he took to son-in-law and made King in his stead a Prince called Kamar al-Zaman, distinguished for justice and munificence, equity and benevolence." When Amjad heard tell of his father, he groaned and wept and lamented and knew not whither to go. However, he bought a something of food and carried it to a retired spot where he sat down thinking to eat; but, recalling his brother, he fell a-weeping and swallowed but a morsel to keep breath and body together, and that against his will. Then he rose and walked about the city, seeking news of his brother till he saw a Moslem tailor sitting in his shop; so he sat down by him and told him his story; whereupon quoth the tailor, "If he have fallen into the hands of the Magians, thou shalt hardly see him again; yet it may be Allah will re-unite you twain. But thou, O my brother," he continued, "wilt thou lodge with me?" Amjad answered, "Yes"; and the tailor rejoiced at this. So he abode with him many days, what while the tailor comforted him and exhorted him to patience and taught him tailoring, till he became expert in the craft. Now one day he went forth to the sea-shore and washed his clothes; after which he entered the bath and put on clean raiment; then he walked about the city to divert himself with its sights, and presently there met him on the way a woman of passing beauty and loveliness, without peer for grace and comeliness. When she saw him she raised her face-veil and signed to him by moving her eyebrows and her eyes with luring glances, and versified these couplets:—

I drooped my glance when seen thee on the way * As though, O slim-waist! felled by Sol's hot ray:

Thou art the fairest fair that e'er appeared, * Fairer to-day than fair of yesterday¹:

Were Beauty parted, a fifth part of it * With Joseph or a part of fifth would stay;

The rest would fly to thee, thine ownest own; * Be every soul thy sacrifice I pray!

When Amjad heard these her words they gladdened his heart, which inclined to her, and his bowels yearned towards her and the hands of love sported with him; so he sighed to her in reply and spoke these couplets:—

Above the rose of cheek is thorn of lance²; * Who dareth pluck it, rashest chevisance?

1 i.e. thy beauty is ever increasing.

2 Alluding, as usual, to the eye-lashes, e.g.,—

An eyelash arrow from an eyebrow bow.

Stretch not thy hand towards it, for night long * Those lances marred because we snatched a glance!

Say her, who tyrant is and tempter too * (Though justice might her tempting power enhance) :—

Thy face would add to errors were it veiled ; * Unveiled I see its guard hath best of chance!

Eye cannot look upon Sol's naked face ; * But can, when mist-cloud dims his countenance :

The honey-hive is held by honey-bee¹ ; * Ask the tribe-guards what wants their vigilance ?

An they would slay me, let them end their ire * Rancorous, and grant us freely to advance :

They're not more murderous, an charge the whole * Than charging glance of her who wears the mole.

And hearing these lines from Amjad she sighed with the deepest sighs and signing to him again, repeated these couplets :—

'Tis thou hast trodden coyness-path not I : * Grant me thy favours for the time draws nigh :

O thou who makest morn with light of brow, * And with loosed brow-locks night in lift to stye!

Thine idol-aspect made of me thy slave, * Tempting as temptedst me in days gone by :

'Tis just my liver fry with hottest love : * Who worship fire for God must fire aby :

Thou sellest like of me for worthless price ; * If thou must sell, ask high of those who buy.

When Amjad heard these her words he said to her, "Will thou come to my lodging or shall I go with thee to thine?" So she hung her head in shame to the ground and repeated the words of Him whose name be exalted, "Men shall have the pre-eminence above women, because of those advantages wherein Allah hath caused the one of them to excel the other."² Upon this, Amjad took the hint—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Amjad took the woman's hint and understood that she wished to go with him

¹ Lane (ii. 168) reads:— "The niggardly female is protected by her niggardness"; a change of "Nahilah" (bee-hive) into "Bakhilah" (she skin-flint).

² Koran, iv. 38. The advantages are bodily strength, understanding, and the high privilege of Holy War. Thus far, and thus far only, woman amongst Moslems is "lesser man."

whither he was going; he felt himself bounden to find a place wherein to receive her, but was ashamed to carry her to the house of his host, the tailor. So he walked on and she walked after him, and the two ceased not walking from street to street and place to place, till she was tired and said to him, "O my lord, where is thy house?" Answered he, "Before us a little way." Then he turned aside into a handsome by-street, followed by the young woman, and walked on till he came to the end, when he found it was no thoroughfare and exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" Then raising his eyes, he saw, at the upper end of the lane, a great door with two stone benches; but it was locked. So Amjad sat down on one of the benches and she on the other; and she said to him, "O my lord, wherefore waitest thou?" He bowed his head awhile to the ground then raised it and answered, "I am awaiting my Mameluke who hath the key; for I bade him make me ready meat and drink and flowers, to deck the wine-service against my return from the bath." But he said to himself, "Haply the time will be tedious to her and she will go about her business, leaving me here, when I will fare my own way." However, as soon as she was weary of long waiting, she said, "O my lord, thy Mameluke delayeth; and here are we sitting in the street"; and she arose and took a stone and went up to the lock. Said Amjad, "Be not in haste, but have patience till the servant come." However, she hearkened not to him, but smote the wooden bolt with the stone and broke it in half, whereupon the door opened. Quoth he, "What possessed thee to do this deed?" Quoth she, "Pooh, pooh, my lord! what matter it? Is not the house thy house and thy place?" He said, "There was no need to break the bolt." Then the damsel entered, to the confusion of Amjad, who knew not what to do for fear of the people of the house; but she said to him, "Why dost thou not enter, O light of mine eyes and core of my heart?" Replied he, "I hear and obey; but my servant tarrieth long and I know not if he have done aught of what I bade him and specially enjoined upon him, or not." Hereupon he entered, sore in fear of the people of the house, and found himself in a handsome saloon with four dais'd recesses, each facing other, and containing closets and raised seats, all bespread with stuffs of silk and brocade; and in the midst was a jetting fountain of costly fashion, on whose margin rested a covered tray of meats, with a leather tablecloth hanging up and gem-encrusted dishes, full of fruits and sweet-scented flowers. Hard by stood drinking vessels and a candlestick with a single wax-candle therein; and the place was full of precious stuffs and was ranged with chests and stools, and on each seat lay a parcel of clothes upon which was a purse full of moneys, gold and silver. The floor was paved with marble and the house bore witness in every part to its owner's fortune. When Amjad saw all this, he was confounded at his case and said to himself, "I am a lost man! Verily we are Allah's, and to Allah we are returning!" As for the damsel, when she sighted the place she rejoiced indeed with a joy nothing could exceed, and said to him, "By Allah, O my lord! thy servant hath not failed of his duty; for see, he hath swept the place and cooked the meat and set on the fruit; and indeed I come at the best of times." But he paid no heed to her, his heart being taken up with fear of the house-folk; and she said, "Fie, O my lord, O my heart! What aileth thee to stand thus?" Then she sighed; and, giving him a buss which sounded like the crackling of a walnut, said, "O my lord, an thou have made an appointment with other than with me, I will gird my middle and serve her and thee." Amjad laughed from a heart full of rage and wrath and came forwards and sat down, panting and saying to himself, "Alack, mine ill death and doom when the owner of the place shall return!" Then she seated herself by him and fell to toying and laughing, whilst Amjad sat careful and frowning, thinking a thousand thoughts and communing with himself, "Assuredly the master of the house cannot but come, and then what shall I say to him? he needs must kill me and my life will be lost thus foolishly." Presently she rose and tucking up her sleeves, took a tray of food on which she laid the cloth and then set it before Amjad and began to eat, saying, "Eat, O my lord." So he came forward and ate; but the food was not pleasant to him; on the contrary, he ceased not to look towards the door, till the damsel had eaten her fill, when she took away the tray of the meats and setting on the dessert, fell to eating of the dried fruits. Then she brought the wine-service, and opening the jar filled a cup and handed it to Amjad, who took it from her hand, saying to himself, "Ah, ah! and well-away, when the master of the house cometh and seeth me!" and he kept his eyes fixed on the threshold, even with cup in hand. While he was in this case, lo! in came the master of the house, who was a white slave, one of the chief men of the city, being Master of the Horse¹ to the King. He had fitted up this saloon for his pleasures, that he might make merry therein and be private with whom he would, and he had that day bidden a youth whom he loved and had made this entertainment for him. Now the name of this slave was Bahádur,² and he was open of hand, generous, munificent, and fain of alms-giving and charitable works.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Bahadur, the Master of the Horse and the owner of the house, came to the door of the saloon and found it open, he entered slowly and softly and, looking in with head advanced and outstretched neck, saw Amjad and the girl sitting before the dish of fruit and the wine-jar in front of them. Now Amjad at that moment had the cup in his hand and his face turned to the door; and when his glance met Bahadur's eyes his hue turned pale yellow and his side-muscles quivered, so seeing his trouble Bahadur signed to him with his finger on his lips, as much as to say, "Be silent and come hither to me." Whereupon he set down the cup and rose, and the damsel cried, "Whither away?" He shook his head and signing to her that he wished to make water, went out into the passage barefoot. Now when he saw Bahádur he knew him for the master of the house; so he hastened to him and, kissing his hands, said to him, "Allah upon thee, O my lord, ere thou do me a hurt, hear what I have to say." Then he told him who he was from first to last, and acquainted him with what caused him to quit his native land and royal state, and how he had not entered his house of his free will, but that it was the girl who had broken the lock-bolt and done all this.³ When Bahadur heard his story and knew that he was a King's son, he felt for him and taking compassion on him, said, "Hearken to me, O Amjad, and do what I bid thee and I will guarantee thy safety from that thou fearest; but if thou cross me I will kill thee." Amjad replied, "Command me as thou wilt: I

1 Arab. "Amir Yákhúr," a corruption of "Akhor" = stable (Persian).

2 A servile name in Persian, meaning "the brave," and a title of honour at the Court of Delhi when following the name. Many English officers have made themselves ridiculous (myself amongst the number) by having it engraved on their seal-rings, e.g., Brown Sáhíb Bahádur. To write the word "Behadír" or "Bahádír" is to adopt the wretched Turkish corruption.

3 "Jerry Sneak" would be the English reader's comment; but in the East all charges are laid upon women.

will not gainsay thee in aught; no, never, for I am a freedman of thy bounty." Rejoined Bahadur, "Then go back forthwith into the saloon, sit down in thy place, and be at peace and at thine ease; I will presently come in to thee, and when thou seest me (remember my name is Bahadur) do thou revile me and rail at me, saying:—What made thee tarry till so late? And accept no excuse from me; nay, so far from it, rise and beat me; and, if thou spare me, I will do away thy life. Enter now and make merry, and whatsoever thou seekest of me at this time I will bring thee forthwith; and do thou spend this night as thou wilt and on the morrow wend thy way. This I do in honour of thy strangerhood, for I love the stranger and hold myself bounden to do him devoir." So Amjad kissed his hand, and returning to the saloon with his face clad in its natural white and red, at once said to the damsel, "O my mistress, thy presence had gladdened this thine own place and ours is indeed a blessed night." Quoth the girl, "Verily I see a wonderful change in thee, that thou now welcomest me so cordially!" So Amjad answered, "By Allah, O my lady! methought my servant Bahadur had robbed me of some necklaces of jewels, worth ten thousand dinars each; however, when I went out but now in concern for this, I sought for them and found them in their place. I know not why the slave tarrieth so long and needs must I punish him for it." She was satisfied with his answer, and they sported and drank and made merry and ceased not to be so till near sundown, when Bahadur came in to them, having changed his clothes and girt his middle and put on shoes,¹ such as are worn of Mamelukes. He saluted and kissed the ground; then held his hands behind him and stood, with his head hanging down, as one who confesseth to a fault. So Amjad looked at him with angry eyes and asked, "Why hast thou tarried till now, O most pestilent of slaves?" Answered Bahadur, "O my lord, I was busy washing my clothes and knew not of thy being here; for our appointed time was nightfall and not day-tide." But Amjad cried out at him, saying, "Thou liest, O vilest of slaves! By Allah! I must needs beat thee." So he rose and, throwing Bahadur prone on the ground, took a stick and beat him gently; but the damsel sprang up and, snatching the stick from his hand, came down upon Bahadur so lustily that in extreme pain the tears ran from his eyes, and he ground his teeth together and called out for succour; whilst Amjad cried out to the girl "Don't"; and she cried out, "Let me satisfy my anger upon him!" till at last he pulled the stick out of her hand and pushed her away. So Bahadur rose and wiping away his tears from his cheeks, waited upon them the while; after which he swept the hall and lighted the lamps; but as often as he went in and out, the lady abused him and cursed him till Amjad was wroth with her and said, "For Almighty Allah's sake leave my Mameluke; he is not used to this." Then they sat and ceased not eating and drinking (and Bahadur waiting upon them) till midnight when, being weary with service and beating, he fell asleep in the midst of the hall and snored and snorted; whereupon the damsel, who was drunken with wine, said to Amjad, "Arise, take the sword hanging yonder and cut me off this slave's head; and, if thou do it not, I will be the death of thee!" "What possesseth thee to slay my slave?" asked Amjad; and she answered, "Our joyaunce will not be complete but by his death. If thou wilt not kill him, I will do it myself." Quoth Amjad, "By Allah's rights to thee, do not this thing!" Quoth she, "It must perforce be"; and taking down the sword drew it and made at Bahadur to kill him; but Amjad said in his mind, "This man hath entreated us courteously and sheltered us and done us kindness and made himself my slave: shall we requite him by slaughtering him? This shall never be!" Then he said to the woman, "If my Mameluke must be killed, better I should kill him than thou." So saying, he took the sword from her and raising his hand smote her on the neck and made her head fly from her body. It fell upon Bahadur who awoke and sat up and opened his eyes, when he saw Amjad standing by him and in his hand the sword dyed with blood, and the damsel lying dead. He enquired what had passed, and Amjad told him all she had said, adding, "Nothing would satisfy her but she must slay thee; and this is her reward." Then Bahadur rose and kissing the Prince's hand, said to him, "Would to Heaven thou hadst spared her! but now there is nothing for it but to rid us of her without stay or delay before the day break." Then he girded his loins and took the body, wrapped it in an Abá-cloak and laying it in a large basket of palm-leaves he shouldered it saying, "Thou art a stranger here and knowest no one: so sit thou in this place and await my return till daybreak. If I come back to thee, I will assuredly do thee great good service and use my endeavours to have news of thy brother; but if by sunrise I return not, know that all is over with me; and the Peace be upon thee, and the house and all it containeth of stuffs and money are thine." Then he fared forth from the saloon bearing the basket; and threading the streets he made for the salt sea, thinking to throw it therein:

1 Zarábin, plur. of Zarbín. See Night dcccxcix.

but as he drew near the shore, he turned and saw that the Chief of Police and his officers had ranged themselves around him; and on recognising him, they wondered and opened the basket, wherein they found the slain woman. So they seized him and laid him in bilboes all that night till the morning, when they carried him and the basket, as it was, to the King and reported the case. The King was sore enraged when he looked upon the slain and said to Bahadur, "Woe to thee! Thou art always so doing; thou killest folk and castest them into the sea and takest their goods. How many murders hast thou done ere this?" Thereupon Bahadur hung his head—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Bahadur hung down his head groundwards before the King, who cried out at him, saying, "Woe to thee! Who killed this girl?" He replied, "O my lord! I killed her, and there is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" So the King in his anger commanded to hang him; and the hangman went down with him by the King's commandment, and the Chief of Police accompanied him with a crier who called upon all the folk to witness the execution of Bahadur, the King's Master of the Horse; and on this wise they paraded him through the main streets and the market-streets. This is how it fared with Bahadur; but as regards Anjad, he awaited his host's return till the day broke and the sun rose, and when he saw that he came not, he exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! Would I knew what is become of him?" And, as he sat musing, behold! he heard the crier proclaiming Bahadur's sentence and bidding the people to see the spectacle of his hanging at mid-day; whereat he wept and exclaimed, "Verily, we are Allah's and to Him we are returning! He meaneth to sacrifice himself unjustly for my sake, when it was I who slew her. By Allah, this shall never be!" Then he went from the saloon and, shutting the door after him, hurriedly threaded the streets till he overtook Bahadur, when he stood before the Chief of Police, and said to him, "O my lord, put not Bahadur to death, for he is innocent. By Allah! none killed her but I." Now when the

¹ Here the formula means "I am sorry for it, but I couldn't help it."

Captain of Police heard these words, he took them both, and carrying them before the King acquainted him with what Amjad had said; whereupon he looked at the Prince and asked him, "Didst thou kill the damsel?" He answered, "Yes," and the King said, "Tell me why thou killedst her, and speak the truth." Replied Amjad, "O King, it is indeed a marvellous event and a wondrous matter that hath befallen me: were it graven with needles on the eye-corners, it would serve as a warner to whoso would be warned!" Then he told him his whole story and informed him of all that had befallen him and his brother, first and last; whereat the King was much startled and surprised and said to him, "Know that now I find thee to be excusable; but list, O youth! wilt thou be my Wazir?" "Hearkening and obedience," answered Amjad; whereupon the King bestowed magnificent dresses of honour on him and Bahadur, and gave him a handsome house, with eunuchs and officers and all things needful, appointing him stipends and allowances and bidding him make search for his brother As'ad. So Amjad sat down in the seat of the Wazirate, and governed and did justice and invested and deposed and took and gave. Moreover, he sent out a crier to cry his brother throughout the city, and for many days made proclamation in the main streets and market-streets, but heard no news of As'ad nor happened on any trace of him. Such was his case; but as regards his brother, the Magi ceased not to torture As'ad night and day and eve and morn for a whole year's space, till their festival drew near, when the old man Bahram¹ made ready for the voyage and fitted out a ship for himself.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Bahram, the Magian, having fitted out a ship for the voyage, took As'ad and put him in a chest which he locked and had it transported on board. Now it so came to pass that, at the very time of shipping it, Amjad was standing to divert himself by looking upon the sea; and when he saw the men carrying the gear and shipping it, his heart throbbed and he called to his pages to bring him his beast. Then, mounting with a company of his officers, he rode down to the sea-side and halted before the Magian's ship, which he commanded his men to board and search. They did his bidding, and boarded the vessel and rummaged in every part, but found nothing; so they returned and told Amjad, who mounted again and rode back. But he felt troubled in mind; and when he reached his place and entered his palace, he cast his eyes on the wall and saw written thereon two lines which were these couplets:—

¹ A noble name of the Persian Kings (meaning the planet Mars) corrupted in Europe to Varanes.

My friends! if ye are banisht from mine eycs, * From heart and mind ye ne'er go wandering:
But ye have left me in my woe, and rob * Rest from my eyelids while ye are slumbering.

And seeing them Amjad thought of his brother and wept. Such was his case; but as for Bahram, the Magian, he embarked and shouted and bawled to his crew to make sail in all haste. So they shook out the sails and departed and ceased not to fare on many days and nights; and every other day Bahram took out As'ad and gave him a bit of bread and made him drink a sup of water, till they drew near the Mountain of Fire. Then there came out on them a storm-wind and the sea rose against them, so that the ship was driven out of her course till she took a wrong line and fell into strange waters; and at last they came in sight of a city builded upon the shore, with a castle whose windows overlooked the main. Now the ruler of this city was a Queen called Marjánah, and the captain said to Bahram, "O my lord, we have strayed from our course and come to the island of Queen Marjanah, who is a devout Moslemah; and, if she know that we are Magians, she will take our ship and slay us to the last man. Yet needs must we put in here to rest and refit." Quoth Bahram, "Right is thy recking, and whatso thou seest fit that will I do!" Said the ship-master, "If the Queen summon us and question us, how shall we answer her?" and Bahram replied, "Let us clothe this Moslem we have with us in a Mameluke's habit and carry him ashore with us, so that when the Queen sees him she will suppose and say, This is a slave. As for me I will tell her that I am a slave-dealer¹ who buys and sells white slaves, and that I had with me many but have sold all save this one, whom I retained to keep my accounts, for he can read and write." And the captain said,

¹ Arab. "Jalláb," one of the three muharramát or forbiddens; the Hárík al-hajar (burner of stone), the Káti' al-shajar (cutter of trees), and the Báyi al-bashar (seller of men, vulg. Jalláb). The two former worked, like the Italian Carbonari, in desert places where they had especial opportunities for crime. (Pilgrimage, iii. 140.) None of these things must be practised during Pilgrimage on the holy soil of Al-Hijaz—not including Jeddah.

"This device should serve." Presently they reached the city and slackened sail and cast the anchors; and the ship lay still, when behold, Queen Marjanah came down to them, attended by her guards and halting before the vessel, called out to the captain, who landed and kissed ground before her. Quoth she, "What is the lading of this thy ship and whom hast thou with thee?" Quoth he, "O Queen of the Age, I have with me a merchant who dealeth in slaves." And she said, "Hither with him to me"; whereupon Bahram came ashore to her, with As'ad walking behind him in a slave's habit, and kissed earth before her. She asked, "What is thy condition?" and he answered, "I am a dealer in chattels." Then she looked at As'ad and, taking him for a Mameluke, asked him, "What is thy name, O youth?" He answered, "Dost thou ask my present or my former name?" "Hast thou, then, two names?" enquired she, and he replied (and indeed his voice was choked with tears), "Yes; my name aforetime was Al-As'ad, the most happy, but now it is Al-Mu'tarr—Miserrimus." Her heart inclined to him and she said, "Canst thou write?" "Yes," answered he, and she gave him ink-case and reed-pen and paper and said to him, "Write somewhat that I may see it." So he wrote these two couplets:—

What can the slave do when pursued by Fate, * O justest Judge! whatever be his state¹?

Whom God throws hand-bound in the depths, and says, * Beware lest water should thy body wet²?

Now when she read these lines, she had ruth upon him and said to Bahram, "Sell me this slave." He replied, "O my lady, I cannot sell him, for I have parted with all the rest and none is left with me but he." Quoth the Queen, "I must need have him of thee, either by sale or way of gift." But quoth Bahram, "I will neither sell him nor give him." Whereat she was wroth and taking As'ad by the hand, carried him up to the castle and sent to Bahram, saying, "Except thou set sail and depart our city this

1 The verses contain the tenets of the Murjiy sect, which attaches infinite importance to faith and little or none to works. Sale (sect. viii.) derives his "Morgians" from the "Jabarians" (Jabari), who are the direct opponents of the "Kadarians" (Kadari), denying free will and free agency to man, and ascribing his actions wholly to Allah. Lane (ii. 243) gives the orthodox answer to the heretical question:

Water could wet him not if God please guard His own; * Nor need man care though bound of hands in sea he's thrown:

But if his Lord decree that he in sea be drowned, * He'll drown albeit in the wild and wold he wone

2 Our proverb says Give a man luck and throw him into the sea.

very night, I will seize all thy goods and break up thy ship." Now when the message reached the Magian, he grieved with sore grief and cried, "Verily this voyage is on no wise to be commended." Then he arose and made ready and took all he needed and awaited the coming of the night to resume his voyage, saying to the sailors, "Provide yourselves with your things and fill your water-skins, that we may set sail at the last of the night." So the sailors did their business and awaited the coming of darkness. Such was their case ; but as regards Queen Marjanah, when she had brought As'ad into the castle, she opened the casements overlooking the sea and bade her handmaids bring food. They set food before As'ad and herself and both ate, after which the Queen called for wine—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Queen Marjanah bade her handmaids bring wine and they set it before her, she fell to drinking with As'ad. Now Allah (be He extolled and exalted!) filled her heart with love for the Prince and she kept crowning his cup and handing it to him till his reason fled; and presently he rose and left the hall to satisfy a call of nature. As he passed out of the saloon he saw an open door through which he went, and walked on till his walk brought him to a vast garden full of all manner fruits and flowers; and, sitting down under a tree, he did his occasion. Then he rose and went up to a jetting fountain in the garden and made the lesser ablution and washed his hands and face, after which he would have risen to go away; but the air smote him and he fell back, with his clothes undone and slept, and night overcame him thus. So far concerning him; but as concerns Bahram, the night being come, he cried out to his crew, saying, "Set sail and let us away!" and they answered, "We hear and obey, but wait till we fill our water-skins and then we will make sail." So they landed with their water-skins and went round about the castle, and found nothing but garden-walls; whereupon they climbed over into the garden and followed the track of feet, which led them to the fountain; and there they found As'ad lying on his back. They knew him and were glad to find him; and, after filling their water-skins, they bore him off and climbed the wall again with him and carried him back in haste to Bahram, to whom they said, "Hear the good tidings of thy winning thy wish; and gladden thy heart and beat thy drums and sound thy pipes; for thy prisoner, whom Queen Marjanah took from thee by force, we have found and brought back to thee"; and they threw As'ad down before him. When Bahram saw him his heart leapt for joy and his breast swelled with gladness. Then he bestowed largesse on the sailors and bade them set sail in haste. So they sailed forthright, intending to make the Mountain of Fire and stayed not their course till the morning. This is how it fared with them; but as regards Queen Marjanah, she abode awhile, after As'ad went down from her, awaiting his return in vain, for he came not; thereupon she rose and sought him, yet found no trace of him. Then she bade her women light flambeaux and look for him, whilst she went forth in person, and seeing the garden door open knew that he had gone thither. So she went out into the garden and, finding his sandals lying by the fountain, searched the place in every part, but came upon no sign of him; and yet she gave not over the search till morning. Then she enquired for the ship and they told her, "The vessel set sail in the first watch of the night"; wherefor she knew that they had taken As'ad with them, and this was grievous to her and she was sore an-angered. She bade equip ten great ships forthwith, and making ready for fight embarked in one of the ten with her Mamelukes and slave-women and men-at-arms, all splendidly accoutred and weaponed for war. They spread the sails, and she said to the captains, "If you overtake the Magian's ship, ye shall have of me dresses of honour and largesse of money; but if you fail so to do, I will slay you to the last man." Whereat fear and great hope animated the crews, and they sailed all that day and the night, and the second day and the third day till on the fourth they sighted the ship of Bahram, the Magian, and before evening fell the Queen's squadron had surrounded it on all sides, just as Bahram had taken As'ad forth of the chest and was beating and torturing him, whilst the Prince cried out for help and deliverance, but found neither helper nor deliverer; and the grievous bastinado sorely tormented him. Now while so occupied, Bahram chanced to look up and seeing himself encompassed by the Queen's ships, as the white of the eye encompasseth the black, he gave himself up for lost and groaned and said, "Woe to thee, O As'ad! This is all out of thy head." Then taking him by the hand he bade his men throw him overboard and cried, "By Allah, I will slay thee before I die myself!" So they carried him along by the hands and feet and cast him into the sea and he sank ; but Allah (be He extolled and exalted !) willed that his life be saved and that his doom be deferred ; so He caused him to sink and rise again and he struck out with his hands and feet, till the Almighty gave him relief, and sent him deliverance ; and the waves bore him far from the Magian's ship and threw him ashore. He landed, scarce crediting his escape, and once more on land he doffed his clothes and wrung them and spread them out to dry ; whilst he sat naked and weeping over his condition, and bewailing his calamities and mortal dangers, and captivity and strangerhood. And presently he repeated these two couplets :—

Allah, my patience fails : I have no ward ; * My breast is straitened and clean cut my cord ;
To whom shall wretched slave of case complain, * Save to his Lord ?
O thou of lords the Lord !

Then having ended his verse, he rose and donned his clothes, but he knew not whither to go or whence to come ; so he fed on the herbs of the earth and the fruits of the trees and he drank of the streams, and fared on night and day till he came in sight of a city, whereupon he rejoiced and hastened his pace ; but when he reached it "—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when he reached the city the shades of evening closed around him and the gates were shut. Now, by the decrees of Fate and man's lot, this was the very city wherein he had been a prisoner and to whose King his brother Amjad was Minister. When As'ad saw the gate was locked he turned back and made for the burial-ground, where, finding a tomb without a door, he entered therein and lay down and fell asleep, with his face covered by his long sleeve.¹ Meanwhile Queen Marjanah, coming up with Bahram's ship, questioned him of As'ad. Now the Magian, when Queen Marjanah overtook him with her ships, baffled her by his artifice and gramarye ; swearing to her that he was not with him and that he knew nothing of him. She searched the ship, but found no trace of her friend, so she took Bahram and carrying him back to her castle, would have put him to death, but he ransomed himself from her with all his good and his ship; and she released him and his men. They went forth from her hardly believing in their deliverance, and fared on ten days' journey till they came to their own city and found the gate shut, it being eventide. So they made for the burial-ground, thinking to lie the night there, and, going round about the tombs, as Fate and Fortune would have it, saw the building wherein As'ad lay wide open; whereat Bahram marvelled and said, "I must look into this sepulchre." Then he entered and found As'ad lying in a corner fast asleep, with his head covered by his sleeve; so he raised his head and, looking in his face, knew him for the man on whose account he had lost his good and his ship, and cried, "What! are thou yet alive?" Then he bound him and gagged him without further parley, and carried him to his house, where he clapped heavy shackles on his feet and lowered him into the underground dungeon aforesaid prepared for the tormenting of Moslems, and he bade his daughter, by name Bostân,¹ torture him night and day till the next year, when they would again visit the Mountain of Fire and there offer him up as a sacrifice. Then he beat him grievously and, locking the dungeon door upon him, gave the keys to his daughter. By-and-by Bostan opened the door and went down to beat him, but finding him a comely youth and a sweet-faced, with arched brows and eyes black with nature's Kohl,² she fell in love with him and asked him, "What is thy name?" "My name is As'ad," answered he; whereat she cried, "Mayst thou indeed be happy as thy name,³ and happy be thy days! Thou deservest not torture and blows, and I see thou hast been injuriously entreated." And she comforted him with kind words and loosed his bonds. Then she questioned him of the religion of Al-Islam, and he told her that it was the true and right faith and that our lord Mohammed had approved himself by surpassing miracles⁴ and

¹ As a rule Easterns, I repeat, cover head and face when sleeping, especially in the open air and moonlight. Europeans find the practice difficult, and can learn it only by long habit.

¹ Pers. = a flower-garden. In Galland, Bahram has two daughters, Bostama and Cavama. In the Bres. Edit. the daughter is "Bostân," and the slave-girl "Kawâm."

² Arab. "Kahl" = eyes which look as if darkened with antimony; hence the name of the noble Arab breed of horses "Kuhaylat," (Al-Ajuz, etc.).

³ "As'ad" = more (or most) fortunate.

⁴ This is the vulgar belief, although Mohammed expressly disclaimed the power in the Koran (chapt. xiii. 8), "Thou art commissioned to be a preacher only and not a worker of miracles." "Signs" (Arab. Āyāt) may here also mean verses of the Koran, which the Apostle of Allah held to be his standing miracles. He despised the common miracula which in the East are of everyday occurrence and are held to be easy for any holy man.

signs manifest, and that fire-worship is harmful and not profitable; and he went on to expound to her the tenets of Al-Islam till she was persuaded, and the love of the True Faith entered her heart. Then, as Almighty Allah had mixed up with her being a fond affection for As'ad, she pronounced the Two Testimonies¹ of the Faith and became of the people of felicity. After this, she brought him meat and drink and talked with him and they prayed together: moreover, she made him chicken stews and fed him therewith, till he regained strength, and his sickness left him and he was restored to his former health. Such things befell him with the daughter of Bahram, the Magian; and so it happened that one day she left him and stood at the house-door when behold! she heard the crier crying aloud and saying, "Whoso hath with him a handsome young man, whose favour is thus and thus, and bringeth him forth, shall have all he seeketh of money; but if any have him and deny it, he shall be hanged over his own door, and his property shall be plundered and his blood go for naught." Now As'ad had acquainted Bostan bint Bahram² with his whole history; so, when she heard the crier, she knew that it was he who was sought for and going down to him, told him the news. Then he fared forth and made for the mansion of the Wazir, whom, when As'ad saw, he exclaimed, "By Allah, this Minister is my brother Amjad!" Then he went up (and the damsel walking behind him) to the Palace, where he again saw his brother, and threw himself upon him; whereupon Amjad also knew him and fell upon his neck and they embraced each other, whilst the Wazir Mamelukes dismounted and stood round them. They lay awhile insensible and when they came to themselves, Amjad took his brother and carried him to the Sultan, to whom he related the whole story, and the Sultan charged him to plunder Bahram's house—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Hume does not believe in miracles because he never saw one. Had he travelled in the East he would have seen (and heard of) so many that his scepticism (more likely that testimony should be false than miracles be true) would have been based on a firmer foundation. It is one of the marvels of our age that whilst two-thirds of Christendom (the Catholics and the "Orthodox" Greeks) believe in "miracles" occurring not only in ancient but even in our present days, the influential and intelligent third (Protestant) absolutely "denies the fact."

1 Arab. "Al-Shahādātāni"; testifying the Unity and the Apostleship.

2 Good prototypes of Shylock and Jessica

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Sultan ordered Amjad to plunder Bahram's house and to hang its owner. So Amjad despatched thither for that purpose a company of men, who sacked the house and took Bahram and brought his daughter to the Wazir, by whom she was received with all honour, for As'ad had told his brother the torments he had suffered and the kindness she had done him. Thereupon Amjad related in his turn to As'ad all that had passed between himself and the damsel; and how he had escaped hanging and had become Wazir; and they made moan, each to other, of the anguish they had suffered for separation. Then the Sultan summoned Bahram and bade strike off his head; but he said, "O most mighty King, art thou indeed resolved to put me to death?" Replied the King, "Yes, except thou save thyself by becoming a Moslem." Quoth Bahram, "O King, bear with me a little while!" Then he bowed his head ground-ward and presently raising it again, made profession of The Faith and islamised at the hands of the Sultan. They all rejoiced at his conversion, and Amjad and As'ad told him all that had befallen them, whereat he wondered and said, "O my lords, make ready for the journey and I will depart with you and carry you back to your father's court in a ship." At this they rejoiced and wept with sore weeping; but he said, "O my lords, weep not for your departure, for it shall reunite you with those you love, even as were Ni'amah and Naomi." "And what befell Ni'amah and Naomi?" asked they. "They tell," replied Bahram, "(but Allah alone is All-knowing) the following tale of

END OF VOL. III.

والسلام

BENARES: MDCCCLXXXV: PRINTED BY THE KAMASHASTRA SOCIETY FOR PRIVATE SUBSCRIBERS ONLY.

VOLUME IV.

PLAIN AND LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS, NOW

ENTITLED

THE BOOK OF THE

Thousand Nights and a Night

WITH INTRODUCTION EXPLANATORY NOTES ON THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF MOSLEM MEN AND A TERMINAL ESSAY UPON THE HISTORY OF THE NIGHTS

BY

RICHARD F. BURTON

TO FOSTER FITZGERALD ARBUTHNOT.

MY DEAR ARBUTHNOT,

I have no fear that a friend, whose friendship has lasted nearly a third of a century, will misunderstand my reasons for inscribing his name upon these pages. You have lived long enough in the East and, as your writings show, observantly enough, to detect the pearl which lurks in the kitchen-midden, and to note that its lustre is not dimmed nor its value diminished by its unclean surroundings.

Ever yours sincerely,

RICHARD F. BURTON.

ATHENÆUM CLUB, October 1, 1885.

NI'AMAH BIN AL-RABI'A AND NAOMI HIS SLAVE-GIRL.

THERE lived once in the city of Cufa¹ a man called Al-Rabi'a bin Hátim, who was one of the chief men of the town, a wealthy and a healthy, and Heaven had vouchsafed him a son, whom he named Ni'amat Allah.² One day, being in the slave-broker's mart, he saw a woman exposed for sale with a little maid of wonderful beauty and grace on her arm. So he beckoned to the broker and asked him, "How much for this woman and her daughter?" He answered "Fifty dinars." Quoth Al-Rabi'a, "Write the contract of sale and take the money and give it to her owner." Then he gave the broker the price and his brokerage, and taking the woman and her child carried them to his house. Now when the daughter of his uncle who was his wife saw the slave, she said to her husband, "O my cousin, what is this damsel?" He replied, "Of a truth, I bought her for the sake of the little one on her arm; for know that, when she groweth up, there will not be her like for beauty, either in the land of the Arabs or the Ajams." His wife remarked, "Right was thy rede"; and said to the woman, "What is thy name?" She replied, "O my lady, my name is Taufík."³ "And what is thy daughter's name?" asked she. Answered the slave, "Sa'ad, the happy." Rejoined her mistress, "Thou sayest sooth, thou art indeed happy, and happy is he who hath bought thee." Then quoth she to her husband, "O my cousin, what wilt thou call her?" and quoth he, "Whatso thou

¹ The name is indifferently derived from the red sand about the town, or the reeds and mud with which it was originally built. It was founded by the Caliph Omar, when the old capital Madáin (Ctesiphon) opposite was held unwholesome, on the west bank of the Euphrates, four days' march from Baghdad, and it has now disappeared. Al-Saffáh, the first Abbaside, made it his capital, and it became a famous seat of Moslem learning; the Kufi school of Arab Grammarians being as renowned as their opponents, the Basri (of Bassorah). It gave a name to the "Cufic" characters, which are, however, of much older date.

² "Ni'amat" = a blessing; and the word is perpetually occurring in Moslem conversation, "Ni'amatu 'lláh" (as pronounced) is also a favourite P. N., and few Anglo-Indians of the Mutiny date will forget the scandalous disclosures of Munshi Ni'amatu 'llah, who had been sent to England by Nana Sahib. Nu'm = prosperity, good fortune, and a P. N. like the Heb. "Naomi."

³ i.e., "causing to be prosperous"; the name, corrupted by the Turks to "Tevfik," is given to either sex, e.g. Taufik Pasha, of Egypt, to whose unprosperous rule and miserable career the signification certainly does not apply.

choosest"; so she, "Then let us call her Naomi"; and he rejoined, "Good is thy device." The little Naomi was reared with Al-Rabi'a's son Ni'amah in one cradle, so to speak, till the twain reached the age of ten, and each grew handsomer than the other; and the boy used to address her, "O my sister!" and she, "O my brother!" till they came to that age when Al-Rabi'a said to Ni'amah, "O my son, Naomi is not thy sister but thy slave. I bought her in thy name whilst thou wast yet in the cradle; so call her no more sister from this day forth." Quoth Ni'amah, "If that be so, I will take her to wife." Then he went to his mother and told her of this, and she said to him, "O my son, she is thy handmaid." So he wedded and went in unto Naomi and loved her; and two¹ years passed over them whilst in this condition, nor was there in all Cufa a fairer girl than Naomi, or a sweeter or a more graceful. As she grew up she learnt the Koran and read works of science and excelled in music and playing upon all kinds of instruments; and in the beauty of her singing she surpassed all the folk of her time. Now one day, as she sat with her husband in the wine-chamber, she took the lute, tightened the strings, and sang these two couplets:—

While thou'rt my lord whose bounty's my estate, * A sword whereby my woes to annihilate, Recourse I never need to Amru or Zayd,² * Nor aught save thee if way to me grow strait!

Ni'amah was charmed with these verses and said to her, "By my life, O Naomi, sing to us with the tambourine and other instruments!" So she sang these couplets to a lively measure:—

By His life who holds my guiding-rein, I swear * I'll meet on love-ground parlous foe nor care:
Good sooth I'll vex revilers, thee obey * And quit my slumbers and all joy forswear:
And for thy love I'll dig in vitals mine * A grave, nor shall my vitals weet 'tis there!

And Ni'amah exclaimed, "Heaven favoured art thou, O Naomi!"

¹ Lane (ii. 187) alters the two to four years.

² i.e. "to Tom, Dick, or Harry"; the names like John Doe and Richard Roe are used indefinitely in Arab Grammar and Syntax. I have noted that Amru is written and pronounced Amr: hence Amru, the Conqueror of Egypt, when told by an astrologer that Jerusalem would be taken only by a thumr hitaranum homo, with three letters in his name, sent for the Caliph Omar (Omr), to whom the so-called Holy City at once capitulated. Hence also most probably the tale of Bhurt pore and the Lord Alligator (Kumbhir), who, however, did not change from Cotton to Cumbermore for some time after the successful siege.

But whilst they led thus the most joyous life, behold! Al-Hajjāj¹ the Viceroy of Cufa said to himself, "Needs must I contrive to take this girl named Naomi and send her to the Commander of the Faithful, Abd al-Malik bin Marwān, for he hath not in his palace her like for beauty and sweet singing." So he summoned an old woman of the duennas of his wives and said to her, "Go to the house of Al-Rabi'a and forgather with the girl Naomi and combine means to carry her off; for her like is not to be found on the face of the earth." She promised to do his bidding; so next morning she donned the woollen clothes of a devotee and hung around her neck a rosary of beads by the thousand; and hending in hand a staff and a leather water-bottle of Yamāni manufacture,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the old woman promised to do the bidding of Al-Hajjaj, and whenas it was morning she donned the woollen clothes of a devotee,² and

1 Bin Yūsuf al-Sakafī, a statesman and soldier of the seventh and eighth centuries (A.D.). He was Governor of Al-Hijaz and Al-Irak under the fifth and sixth Onmiades, and I have noticed his vigorous rule of the Moslems' Holy Land in my Pilgrimage (iii. 194, etc.). He pulled down the Ka'abah and restored it to the condition in which it now is. Al-Siyuti (p. 219) accuses him of having suborned a man to murder Ibn Omar with a poisoned javelin, and of humiliating the Prophet's companions by "sealing them in the necks and hands," that is, he tied a throng upon the neck of each and sealed the knot with lead. In Irak he showed himself equally masterful; but an iron hand was required by the revolutionists of Kufah and Basrah. He behaved like a good Knight in rescuing the Moslem women who called upon his name when taken prisoners by Dahir of Debal (Tathā in Sind). Al-Hajjaj was not the kind of man the Caliph would have chosen for a pander; but the Shi'ahs hated him, and have given him a lasting bad name. In the East men respect manly measures, not the hysterical, philanthropic, pseudo-humanitarianism of our modern government, which is really the cruellest of all. When Ziyād bin Ab'hi was sent by Caliph Mu'awiyah to reform Bassorah, a den of thieves, he informed the lieges that he intended to rule by the sword, and advised all evil-doers to quit the city. The people were forbidden, under pain of death, to walk the streets after prayers; on the first night two hundred suffered; on the second five, and none afterwards. Compare this with our civilised rule in Egypt, where even bands of brigands, a phenomenon perfectly new and unknown to this century, have started up, where crime has doubled in quantity and quality, and where "Christian rule" has thoroughly scandalised a Moslem land.

2 The old bawd's portrait is admirably drawn: all we dwellers in the East have known her well: she is So-and-so. Her dress and manners are the same amongst the Hindus (see the hypocritical female ascetic in the Katha (p. 287) as amongst the Moslems; men of the world at once recognise her and the prudent keep out of her way. She is found in the cities of Southern Europe, ever pious, ever prayerful; and she seems to do her work not so much for profit as for pure or impure enjoyment. In the text her task was easy, as she had to do with a pair of innocents.

hung around her neck a rosary of beads by the thousand and bent in hand a staff and a leather water-bottle of Yamani manufacture, and fared forth crying, "Glory be to Allah! Praised be Allah! There is no god but the God! Allah is Most Great! There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" Nor did she leave off her lauds and her groaning in prayer whilst her heart was full of guile and wiles, till she came to the house of Ni'amah bin al-Rabi'a at the hour of noon-prayer, and knocked at the door. The doorkeeper opened and said to her, "What dost thou want?" Quoth she, "I am a poor pious woman, whom the time of noon-prayer hath overtaken, and lief would I pray in this blessed place." Answered the porter, "O old woman, this is no mosque nor oratory, but the house of Ni'amah son of Al-Rabi'a." She replied, "I know there is neither cathedral-mosque nor oratory like the house of Ni'amah bin al-Rabi'a. I am a chamberwoman of the palace of the Prince of True Believers, and am come out for worship and the visitation of Holy Places." But the porter rejoined, "Thou canst not enter"; and many words passed between them, till at last she caught hold and hung to him saying, "Shall the like of me be denied admission to the house of Ni'amah bin al-Rabi'a, I who have free access to the houses of Emirs and Grandees?" Anon, out came Ni'amah and, hearing their loud language, laughed and bade the old woman enter after him. So she followed him into the presence of Naomi, whom she saluted after the godliest and goodliest fashion, and when she looked on her she was confounded at her exceeding seemlihead and said to her, "O my lady, I commend thee to the safeguard of Allah, who made thee and thy lord fellows in beauty and loveliness!" Then she stood up in the prayer-niche and betook herself to inclination and prostration and prayer, till day departed and night darkened and starkered, when Naomi said to her, "O my mother, rest thy legs and feet awhile." Replied the old woman, "O my lady, whoso seeketh the world to come, let him weary him in this world, and whoso wearieth not himself in this world shall not attain the dwellings of the just in the world to come." Then Naomi brought her food and said to her, "Eat of my bread and pray Heaven to accept my penitence and to have mercy on me." But she cried, "O my lady, I am fasting. As for thee, thou art but a girl and it besitteth thee to eat and drink and make merry; Allah be indulgent to thee! for the Almighty saith:—All shall be punished except him who shall repent and believe and shall work a righteous work.¹" So Naomi continued sitting with the old woman in talk, and presently said to Ni'amah, "O my lord, conjure this ancient dame to sojourn with us awhile, for piety and devotion are imprinted on her countenance." Quoth he, "Set apart for her a chamber where she may say her prayers; and suffer no one to go in to her: peradventure, Allah (extolled and exalted be He!) shall prosper us by the blessing of her presence, and never separate us." So the old woman passed her night in praying and reciting the Koran; and when Allah caused the morn to dawn, she went in to Ni'amah and Naomi and giving them good morning, said to them, "I pray Allah have you in His holy keeping!" Quoth Naomi, "Whither away, O my mother? My lord hath bidden me set apart for thee a chamber, where thou mayst seclude thee for thy devotions." Replied the old woman, "Allah give him long life, and continue His favour to you both! But I would have you charge the doorkeeper not to stay my coming in to you; and, Inshallah! I will go the round of the Holy Places and pray for you two at the end of my devotions every day and night." Then she went out (whilst Naomi wept for parting with her, knowing not the cause of her coming), and returned to Al-Hajjaj, who said to her, "An thou do my bidding soon, thou shalt have of me abundant good." Quoth she, "I ask of thee a full month"; and quoth he, "Take the month." Thereupon the old hag fell to daily visiting Ni'amah's house and frequenting his slave-wife, Naomi;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Thirty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the old hag fell to visiting daily Ni'amah's house, and frequenting his slave-wife, Naomi; and both ceased not to honour her, and she used to go in to them morning and evening and all the household respected her till, one day, being alone with Naomi, she said to her, "O my lady! by Allah! when I go to the Holy Places, I will pray for thee; and I only wish thou wert with me, that thou mightest look on the Elders of the Faith who resort thither, and they should pray for thee according to thy desire." Naomi cried, "I conjure thee by Allah take me with thee!" and she replied, "Ask leave of thy mother-in-law and I will take thee." So Naomi said to her husband's mother, "O my lady, ask my master to let us go forth, me and thee, one day with this my old mother, to prayer and worship with the Fakirs in the Holy Places." Now when Ni'amah came in and sat down, the old woman went up to him and would have kissed his hand, but he forbade her; so she invoked blessings¹ on him and left the house. Next day she came again, in the absence of Ni'amah, and she addressd Naomi, saying, "We prayed for thee yesterday; but arise now and divert thyself and return ere thy lord come home." So Naomi said to her mother-in-law, "I beseech thee, for Allah's sake, give me leave to go with this pious woman, that I may sight the saints of Allah in the Holy Places and return speedily ere my lord come back." Quoth Naomi's mother, "I fear lest thy lord know"; but said the old woman, "By Allah! I will not let her take seat on the floor; no, she shall look, standing on her feet, and not tarry." So she took the damsel by guile and, carrying her to Al-Hajjaj's palace, told him of her coming, after placing her in a lonely chamber; whereupon he went in to her and looking upon her, saw her to be the loveliest of the people of the day, never had he beheld her like. Now when Naomi caught sight of him she veiled her face from him; but he left her not till he had called his Chamberlain, whom he commanded to take fifty horsemen; and he bade him mount the damsel on a swift dromedary, and bear her to Damascus and there deliver her to the Commander of the Faithful, Abd al-Malik bin Marwan. Moreover, he gave him a letter for the Caliph, saying, "Bear him this letter and bring me his answer and hasten thy return to me." So the Chamberlain, without losing time, took the damsel (and she tearful for separation from her lord) and, setting out with her on a dromedary, gave not over journeying till he reached Damascus. There he sought audience of the Commander of the Faithful and, when it was granted, the Chamberlain delivered the damsel and reported the circumstance. The Caliph appointed her a separate apartment, and going into his Harim, said to his wife, "Al-Hajjaj hath bought me a slave-girl of the daughters of the Kings of Cufa² for ten thousand dinars, and hath sent me this letter."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Koran, xxv. 70. I give Sale's version.

¹ Easterns, I have observed, have no way of saying "Thank you"; they express it by a blessing or a short prayer. They have a right to your surplus: daily bread is divided, they say and, eating yours, they consider it their own. I have discussed this matter in Pilgrimage, i. 75-77, in opposition to those who declare that "gratitude" is unknown to Moslems.

² Cufa (Kufah) being a modern place never had a "King," but as the Hindu says, "Delhi is far"—it is a far cry to Loch Awe. Here we can hardly understand "Malik" as Governor or Viceroy; can it be syn. with Zú-mál (moneyed)?

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fortieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Caliph acquainted his wife with the story of the slave-girl, she said to him, "Allah increase to thee His favour!" Then the Caliph's sister went in to the supposed slave-girl and, when she saw her, she said, "By Allah! not unlucky is the man who hath thee in his house, were thy cost an hundred thousand dinars!" And Naomi replied, "O fair of face, what King's palace is this, and what is the city?" She answered, "This is the city of Damascus, and this is the palace of my brother, the Commander of the Faithful, Abd al-Malik bin Marwan." Then she resumed, "Didst thou not know all this?" Naomi said, "By Allah, O my lady! I had no knowledge of it!" when the other asked, "And he who sold thee and took thy price did he not tell thee that the Caliph had bought thee?" Now when Naomi heard these words, she shed tears and said to herself, "Verily, I have been tricked and the trick hath succeeded," adding to herself, "If I speak, none will credit me; so I will hold my peace and take patience, for I know that the relief of Allah is near." Then she bent her head for shame, and indeed her cheeks were tanned by the journey and the sun. So the Caliph's sister left her that day and returned to her on the morrow with clothes and necklaces of jewels, and dressed her; after which the Caliph came in to her and sat down by her side, and his sister said to him, "Look on this handmaid in whom Allah hath conjoined every perfection of beauty and loveliness." So he said to Naomi, "Draw back the veil from thy face"; but she would not unveil, and he beheld not her face. However, he saw her wrists and love of her entered his heart; and he said to his sister, "I will not go in unto her for three days, till she be cheered by thy converse." Then he arose and left her, but Naomi ceased not to brood over her case and sigh for her separation from her master Ni'amah, till she fell sick of a fever during the night and ate not nor drank; and her favour faded and her charms were changed. They told the Caliph of this and her condition grieved him; so he visited her with physicians and men of skill, but none could come at a cure for her. This how it fared with her; but as regards Ni'amah, when he returned home he sat down on his bed and cried, "Ho, Naomi!" But she answered not; so he rose in haste and called out, yet none came to him, as all the women in the house had hidden themselves for fear of him. Then he went out to his mother, whom he found sitting with her cheek on her hand, and said to her, "O my mother, where is Naomi?" She answered, "O my son, she is with one who is worthier than I to be trusted with her, namely, the devout old woman; she went forth with her to visit devotionally the Fakirs and return." Quoth Ni'amah, "Since when hath this been her habit and at what hour went she forth?" Quoth his mother, "She went out early in the morning." He asked, "And how camest thou to give her leave for this?" and she answered, "O my son, 'twas she persuaded me." "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" exclaimed Ni'amah and going forth from his home in a state of distraction, he repaired to the Captain of the Watch to whom said he, "Dost thou play tricks upon me and steal my slave-girl away from my house? I will assuredly complain of thee to the Commander of the Faithful." Said the Chief of Police, "Who hath taken her?" and Ni'amah replied, "An old woman of such and such a mien, clad in woollen raiment and carrying a rosary of beads numbered by thousands." Rejoined the other, "Find me the old woman and I will get thee back thy slave-girl." "And who knows the old woman?" retorted Ni'amah. "And who knows the hidden things save Allah (may He be extolled and exalted!)" cried the Chief, who knew her for Al-Hajjaj's procuress. Cried Ni'amah, "I look to thee for my slave-girl, and Al-Hajjaj shall judge between thee and me"; and the Master of the Police answered, "Go to whom thou wilt." So Ni'amah went to the palace of Al-Hajjaj, for his father was one of the chief men of Cufa; and when he arrived there the Chamberlain went in to the Governor and told him the case; whereupon Al-Hajjaj said, "Hither with him!" and when he stood before him enquired, "What be thy business?" Said Ni'amah, "Such and such things have befallen me"; and the Governor said, "Bring me the Chief of Police, and we will command him to seek for the old woman." Now he knew that the Chief of Police was acquainted with her; so, when he came, he said to him, "I wish thee to make search for the slave-girl of Ni'amah son of Al-Rabi'a." And he answered, "None knoweth the hidden things save Almighty Allah." Rejoined Al-Hajjaj,

1 Abd al-Malik has been before mentioned as the "Sweat of a Stone," etc. He died recommending Al-Hajjaj to his son, Al-Walid, and one of his sayings is still remembered. "He who desireth to take a female slave for carnal enjoyment, let him take a native of Barbary; if he need one for the sake of children, let him have a Persian; and whoso desireth one for service, let him take a Greek." Moderns say, "If you want a brother (in arms) try a Nubian; one to get you wealth, an Abyssinian; and if you want an ass (for labour) a Sawahili, or Zanzibar negroid."

"There is no help for it but thou send out horsemen and look for the damsel in all the roads, and seek for her in the towns."
—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day, and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Al-Hajjaj said to the Captain of the Watch, "There is no help for it but thou send out horsemen, and look for the damsel on all the roads and seek for her in the towns." Then he turned to Ni'amah and said to him, "An thy slave-girl return not, I will give thee ten slave-girls from my house, and ten from that of the Chief of Police." And he again bade the Captain of the Watch, "Go and seek for the girl." So he went out, and Ni'amah returned home full of trouble and despairing of life; for he had now reached the age of fourteen and there was yet no hair on his side-cheeks. So he wept and lamented and shut himself up from his household; and ceased not to weep and lament, he and his mother, till the morning, when his father came in to him and said, "O my son, of a truth, Al-Hajjaj hath put a cheat upon the damsel and hath taken her; but from hour to hour Allah giveth relief." However, grief redoubled on Ni'amah, so that he knew not what he said nor knew he who came in to him, and he fell sick for three months; his charms were changed, his father despaired of him, and the physicians visited him and said, "There is no remedy for him save the damsel." Now as his father was sitting one day, behold, he heard tell of a skilful Persian physician, whom the folk gave out for perfect in medicine and astrology and geomancy. So Al-Rabi'a sent for him and seating him by his side, entreated him with honour, and said to him, "Look into my son's case." Thereupon quoth he to Ni'amah, "Give me thy hand." The young man gave him his hand, and he felt his pulse and his joints, and looked in his face; then he laughed and, turning to his father, said, "Thy son's sole ailment is one of the heart.¹" He replied "Thou sayest sooth, O sage, but apply thy skill to his state and case, and acquaint me with the whole thereof and hide naught from me of his condition." Quoth the Persian, "Of a truth he is enamoured of a slave-girl, and this slave-girl is either in Bassorah or Damascus; and there is no remedy for him but reunion with her." Said Al-Rabi'a, "An thou bring them together, thou shalt live all thy life in wealth and delight." Answered the Persian, "In good sooth this be an easy matter and soon brought about"; and he turned to Ni'amah and said to him, "No hurt shall befall thee; so be of good cheer and keep thine eyes cool and clear." Then quoth he to Al-Rabi'a, "Bring me out four thousand dinars of your money"; so he gave them to him, and he added, "I wish to carry thy son with me to Damascus; and Almighty Allah willing, I will not return thence but with the damsel." Then he turned to the youth and asked, "What is thy name?" and he answered, "Ni'amah." Quoth the Persian, "O Ni'amah, sit up and be of good heart, for Allah will reunite thee with the damsel." And when he sat up the leach continued, "Be of good cheer for we set out for Damascus this very day: put thy trust in the Lord, and eat and drink and be cheerful so as to fortify thyself for travel." Upon this the Persian began making preparation of all things needed, such as presents and rarities; and he took of Al-Rabi'a in all the sum of ten thousand dinars, together with horses and camels and beasts of burden and other requisites. Then Ni'amah farewelled his father and mother and journeyed with the physician to Aleppo. They could find no news of Naomi there, so they fared on to Damascus, where they abode three days, after which the Persian took a shop and he adorned even the shelves with vessels of costly porcelain, with covers of silver, and with gildings and stuffs of price. Moreover, he set before himself vases and flagons of glass full of all manner of ointments and syrups, and he surrounded them with cups of crystals and placing astrolabe and geomantic tablet facing him, he donned a physician's habit and took his seat in the shop. Then he set Ni'amah standing before him clad in a shirt and gown of silk and, girding his middle with a silken kerchief gold-embroidered, said to him, "O Ni'amah, henceforth thou art my son; so call me naught but sire and I will call thee naught but son." And he replied, "I hear and I obey." Thereupon the people of Damascus flocked to the Persian's shop that they might gaze on the youth's goodliness and the beauty of the shop and its contents, whilst the physician spake to Ni'amah in Persian and he answered him in the same tongue, for he knew the language, after the wont of the sons of the notables. So that Persian doctor soon became known among the townsfolk and they began to acquaint him with their ailments, and he to prescribe for them remedies. Moreover, they brought him the water of the sick in phials,¹ and he would test it and say, "He, whose water this is, is suffering from such and such a disease"; and the patient would declare, "Verily this physician sayeth sooth." So he continued to do the occasions of the folk and they to flock to him, till his fame spread throughout the city and into the houses of the great. Now, one day as he sat in his shop, behold, there came up an old woman riding on an ass with a stuffed saddle of brocade embroidered with jewels; and stopping before the Persian's shop drew rein and beckoned him, saying, "Take my hand." He took her hand, and she alighted and asked him, "Art thou the Persian physician from Irak?" "Yes," answered he; and she said, "Know that I have a sick daughter." Then she brought out to him a phial, and the Persian looked at it and said to her, "Oh, my mistress, tell me thy daughter's name, that I may calculate her horoscope and learn the hour in which it will befit her to drink medicine." She replied, "O my brother the Persian,² her name is Naomi."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Probably suggested by the history of Antiochus and Stratonice, with an addition of Eastern mystery such as geomancy.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Persian heard the name of Naomi he fell to calculating and writing on his hand, and presently said, "O my lady, I cannot prescribe a medicine for her till I know what country-woman she is, because of the difference of climate: so tell me in what land she was brought up and what is her age." The old woman replied, "She is fourteen years old, and she was brought up in Cufa of Al-Irak." He asked, "And how long hath she sojourned in this country?" "But a few months," answered she. Now when Ni'amah heard the old woman's words and recognised the name of his slave-girl, his heart fluttered and he was like to faint. Then said the Persian, "Such and such medicines will suit her case"; and the old woman rejoined, "Then make them up and give me what thou hast mentioned, with the blessing of Almighty Allah." So saying, she threw upon the shop-board ten gold pieces; and he looked at Ni'amah and bade him prepare the necessary drugs; whereupon she also looked at the youth and exclaimed, "Allah have thee in His keeping, O my son! Verily, she favoureth thee in age and mien." Then said she to the physician, "O my brother the Persian, is this thy slave or thy son?" "He is my son," answered he. So Ni'amah put up the medicine and, placing it in a little box, took a piece of paper and wrote thereon these two couplets¹:—

¹ Arab. "Káruah": the (old French "urinal"; Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles) "water-doctor," has always been an institution in the East, and he has lately revived in Europe—especially at the German baths and in London.

² Lane makes this phrase "O brother of the Persians!" synonymous with "O Persian!" I think it means more, a Persian being generally considered "too clever by half."

If Naomi bless me with a single glance, * Let Su'adâ sue and Jumî joy to pet:

They said, "Forget her: twenty such thou'lt find," * But none is like her—I will not forget!

He pressed the paper into the box and sealing it up wrote upon the cover the following words in Cufic character: "I am Ni'amah son of Al-Rabi'a of Cufa." Then he set it before the old woman, who took it and bade them farewell and returned to the Caliph's palace; and when she went up with the drugs to the damsel she placed the little box of medicine at her feet, saying, "O my lady, know that there is lately come to our town a Persian physician, than whom I never saw a more skilful nor a better versed in matters of malady. I told him thy name, after shewing him the water-bottle, and forthwith he knew thine ailment and prescribed a remedy. Then he bade his son make thee up this medicine; and there is not in Damaseus a comelier or seemlier youth than this lad of his, nor hath anyone a shop the like of his shop." So Naomi took the box and, seeing the names of her lord and his father written on the cover, changed colour and said to herself, "Doubtless, the owner of this shop is come in search of me." So she said to the old woman, "Describe to me this youth." Answered the old woman, "His name is Ni'amah, he hath a mole on his right eyebrow, is richly clad and is perfectly handsome." Cried Naomi, "Give me the medicine, whereon be the blessing and help of Almighty Allah!" So she drank off the potion (and she laughing) and said, "Indeed it is a blessed medicine!" Then she sought in the box and finding the paper opened it, read it, understood it, and knew that this was indeed her lord, whereat her heart was solaced, and she rejoiced. Now when the old woman saw her laughing she exclaimed, "This is indeed a blessed day!" and Naomi said, "O nurse, I have a mind for something to eat and drink." The old woman said to the serving-women, "Bring a tray of dainty viands for your mistress"; whereupon they set food before her and she sat down to eat. And behold in came the Caliph who, seeing her sitting at meat, rejoiced; and the old woman said to him, "O Commander of the Faithful, I give thee joy of thy hand-maid Naomi's recovery! And the cause is that there is lately come to this our city a physician than whom I never saw a better versed in diseases and their remedies. I fetched her medicine from him and she hath drunken of it but once and is restored to health." Quoth he, "Take a thousand dinars and apply thyself to her treatment till she be completely recovered." And he went away, rejoicing in the damsel's recovery, whilst the old woman betook herself to the Persian's house and delivered the thousand dinars, giving him to know that she was become the Caliph's slave and also handing him a letter which Naomi had written. He took it and gave the letter to Ni'amah, who at first sight knew her hand and fell down in a swoon. When he revived he opened the letter and found these words written therein: "From the slave despoiled of her Ni'amah, her delight; her whose reason hath been beguiled and who is parted from the core of her heart. But afterwards. Of a truth thy letter hath reached me and hath broadened my breast, and solaced my soul, even as saith the poet:—

¹ The verses deal in untranslatable word-plays upon women's names, Naomi (the blessing), Su'adâ or Su'âd (the happy, which Mr. Redhouse, in Ka'ab's Mantle-poem, happily renders Beatrice), and Jumî (a sum or total), the two latter, moreover, being here fictitious.

Thy note came: long-lost fingers wrote that note, * Till drop they sweetest scents for what they wrote:

'Twas Moses to his mother's arms restored; * 'Twas Jacob's eyesight cured by Joseph's coat!¹

When Ni'amah read these verses, his eyes ran over with tears and the old woman said to him, "What maketh thee to weep, O my son? Allah never cause thine eye to shed tears!" Cried the Persian, "O my lady, how should my son not weep, seeing that this is his slave-girl and he her lord, Ni'amah son of Al-Rabi'a of Cufa; and her health dependeth on her seeing him, for naught aileth her but loving him.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ "And he (Jacob) turned from them, and said, 'O how I am grieved for Joseph!' And his eyes became white with mourning. . . . (Quoth Joseph to his brethren), 'Take this my inner garment and throw it on my father's face and he shall recover his sight.' . . . So, when the messenger of good tidings came (to Jacob) he threw it (the shirt) over his face and he recovered his eyesight"—Koran, xii. 84, 93, 96. The commentators, by way of improvement, assure us that the shirt was that worn by Abraham when thrown into the fire (Koran, chapt. xvi.) by Nimrod (!). We know little concerning "Jacob's daughters," who named the only bridge spanning the upper Jordan, and who have a curious shrine-tomb near Jewish "Safed" (North of Tiberias), one of the four "Holy Cities." The Jews ignore these "daughters of Jacob" and travellers neglect them.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Persian cried out to the old woman, "How shall my son not weep, seeing that this is his slave-girl and he her lord, Ni'amah son of Al-Rabi'a of Cufa; and the health of this damsel dependeth on her seeing him and naught aileth her but loving him. So do thou, O my lady, take these thousand dinars to thyself and thou shalt have of me yet more than this; only look on us with eyes of ruth; for we know not how to bring this affair to a happy end save through thee." Then she said to Ni'amah, "Say, art thou indeed her lord?" He replied, "Yes," and she rejoined, "Thou sayest sooth, for she ceaseth not continually to name thee." Then he told her all that had passed from first to last, and she said, "O youth, thou shalt owe thy reunion with her to none but myself." So she mounted, and at once returning to Naomi looked in her face and laughed, saying, "It is just, O my daughter, that thou weep and fall sick for thy separation from thy master Ni'amah, son of Al-Rabi'a of Cufa." Quoth Naomi, "Verily, the veil hath been withdrawn for thee and the truth revealed to thee." Rejoined the old woman, "Be of good cheer and take heart, for I will assuredly bring you together, though it cost me my life." Then she returned to Ni'amah and said to him, "I went to thy slave-girl and conversed with her, and I find that she longeth for thee yet more than thou for her; for although the Commander of the Faithful is minded to become intimate with her, she refuseth herself to him. But if thou be stout of purpose and firm of heart, I will bring you together and venture my life for you, and play some trick and make shift to carry thee into the Caliph's palace, where thou shalt meet her, for she cannot come forth." And Ni'amah answered, "Allah requite thee with good!" Then she took leave of him and went back to Naomi and said, "Thy lord is indeed dying of love for thee and would fain see thee and forgather with thee. What sayest thou?" Naomi replied, "And I too am longing for his sight and dying for his love." Whereupon the old woman took a parcel of women's clothes and ornaments and, repairing to Ni'amah, said to him, "Come with me into some place apart." So he brought her into the room behind the shop, where she stained his hands and decked his wrists and plaited his hair, after which she clad him in a slave-girl's habit and adorned him after the fairest fashion of woman's adornment, till he was as one of the Houris of the Garden of Heaven, and when she saw him thus she exclaimed, "Blessed be Allah, best of Creators! By Allah, thou art handsomer than the damsel.¹ Now, walk with thy left shoulder forwards and thy right well behind, and sway thy hips from side to side."² So he walked before her, as she bade him; and, when she saw he had caught the trick of woman's gait, she said to him, "Expect me to-morrow night, and Allah willing! I will take and carry thee to the palace. But when thou seest the Chamberlains and the Eunuchs be bold, and bow thy head and speak not with any for I will prevent their speech; and with Allah is success!" Accordingly, when the morning dawned, she returned and carrying him to the palace entered before him and he after her step by step. The Chamberlain would have stopped his entering, but the old woman said to him, "O most ill-omened of slaves, this is the handmaid of Naomi, the Caliph's favourite. How durst thou stay her when she would enter?" Then said she, "Come in, O damsel!" and the old woman went in, and they ceased not faring on till they drew near the door leading to the inner piazza of the palace, when she said to him, "O Nîamah, hearten thyself and take courage and enter and turn to the left; then count five doors and pass through the sixth, for it is that of the place prepared for thee. Fear nothing, and if any speak to thee, answer not, neither stop." Then she went up with him to the door, and the Chamberlain there on guard accosted her, saying, "What damsel is this?"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Chamberlain accosted the old woman, saying, "What damsel is this?" quoth the ancient dame, "Our lady hath a mind to buy her"; and he rejoined, "None may enter save by leave of the Commander of the Faithful; so do thou go back with her. I cannot let her pass for thus am I commanded." Replied the old woman, "O Chief Chamberlain, use thy reason. Thou knowest that Naomi, the Caliph's slave-girl, of whom he is enamoured, is but now restored to health, and the Commander of the Faithful hardly yet crediteth her recovery. She is minded to buy this handmaid; so oppose thou not her entrance, lest haply it come to Naomi's knowledge and she be wroth with thee and suffer a relapse, and this cause thy head to be cut off." Then said she to Ni'amah, "Enter, O damsel; pay no heed to what he saith and tell not the Queen-consort that her Chamberlain opposed thine entrance." So Ni'amah bowed his head and entered the palace, and would have turned to the left but mistook the direction and walked to his right; and, meaning to count five doors and enter the sixth, he counted six and entering the seventh found himself in a place whose floor was carpeted with brocade and whose walls were hung with curtains of gold-embroidered silk. And therein stood censers of aloes-wood and ambergris and strong-scented musk, and at the upper end was a couch bespread with cloth of gold, on which he seated himself, marvelling at the magnificence he saw and knowing not what was written for him in the Secret Purpose. As he sat musing on his case, the Caliph's sister, followed by her handmaid, came in upon him; and seeing the youth seated there took him for a slave-girl and accosted him and said, "Who art thou O damsel? and what is thy case and who brought thee hither?" He made no reply and was silent, when she continued, "O damsel, if thou be one of my brother's concubines and he be wroth with thee, I will intercede with him for thee and get thee grace." But he answered her not a word; so she said to her slave-girl, "Stand at the door and let none enter." Then she went up to Ni'amah and looking at him was amazed at his beauty and said to him, "O lady, tell me who thou art and what is thy name and how thou camest here; for I have never seen thee in our palace." Still he answered not, whereat she was angered, and putting her hand to his bosom found no breasts and would have unveiled him, that she might know who he was; but he said to her, "O my lady, I am thy slave and I cast myself on thy protection; do thou protect me." She said, "No harm befall to thee, but tell me who thou art and who brought thee into this my apartment." Answered he, "O Princess, I am known as Ni'amah bin al-Rabi'a of Cufa, and I have ventured my life for the sake of my slave-girl Naomi, whom Al-Hajjaj took by sleight and sent hither." Said she, "Fear not; no harm shall tide thee"; then calling her maid, she said to her, "Go to Naomi's chamber and send her to me." Meanwhile the old woman went to Naomi's bedroom and said to her, "Hath thy lord come to thee?" "No, by Allah!" answered Naomi, and the other said, "Belike he hath gone astray and entered some chamber other than thine and lost himself." So Naomi cried, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! Our last hour is come and we are all lost." And while they were sitting and sadly enough pondering their case, in came the Princess's handmaid and saluting Naomi, said to her, "My lady biddeth thee to her banquet." "I hear and I obey," answered the damsel; and the old woman said, "Belike thy lord is with the Caliph's sister, and the veil of secrecy hath been rent." So Naomi at once sprang up and betook herself to the Princess, who said to her, "Here is thy lord sitting with me; it seemeth he hath mistaken the place: but, please Allah, neither thou nor he hath any cause for fear." When Naomi heard these words she took heart of grace and went up to Ni'amah; and her lord when he saw her—— And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Easterns, I have remarked, mostly recognise the artistic truth that the animal man is handsomer than woman; and that "fair sex" is truly only of skin-colour. The same is the general rule throughout creation; for instance, the stallion compared with the mare, the cock with the hen; while there are sundry exceptions, such as the Falconidæ. As Alexander von Humboldt remarked, "Women are regarded as handsomer than men only by courtesy."

² The Badawi (who is nothing if not horsey) compares the gait of a woman who walks well (in Europe rarely seen out of Spain) with the slightly swinging walk of a thoroughbred mare, bending her graceful neck and looking from side to side at objects as she passes.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Ni'amah saw his handmaid Naomi, he rose to meet her and strained her to his bosom and both fell to the ground fainting. As soon as they came to themselves, the Caliph's sister said to them, "Sit ye down and take we counsel for your deliverance from this your strait." And they answered, "O our lady, we hear and obey: it is thine to command." Quoth she, "By Allah! no harm shall befall you from us!" Then she bade her handmaids bring meat and drink, which was done, and they sat down and ate till they had enough, after which they sat drinking. Then the cup went round amongst them and their cares ceased from them; but Ni'amah said, "Would I knew how this will end." The Princess asked, "O Ni'amah, dost thou love thy slave Naomi?" and he answered, "Of a truth it is my passion for her which hath brought me to this state of peril for my life." Then said she to the damsel, "O Naomi, dost thou love thy lord Ni'amah?" and she replied, "O my lady, it is the love of him which hath wasted my body and brought me to evil case." Rejoined the Princess, "By Allah! since ye love each other thus, may he not exist who would part you! Be of good cheer and keep your eyes cool and clear." At this they both rejoiced, and Naomi called for a lute and when they brought it she took it and tuned it, and played a lively measure which enchanted the hearers, and after the prelude sang these couplets:—

When the slanderers cared but to part us twain, * We owed no blood-debt could raise their ire;

And they poured in our ears all the din of war * And aid failed and friends, when my want was dire;

I fought them hard with mine eyes and tears; * With breath and sword, with the stream and fire!

Then Naomi gave the lute to her master, Ni'amah, saying, "Sing thou to us some verse." So he took it and playing a lively measure intoned these couplets:—

Full Moon if unfreckled would favour thee. * And Sun uneclipsed would reflect thy blee:

I wonder (but love is of wonders full * And ardour and passion and ecstacy)

How short the way to my love I fare, * Which, from her faring, so long I see.

Now when he had made an end of his song Naomi filled the cup and gave it to him, and he took it and drank it off; then she filled again and gave the cup to the Caliph's sister, who also emptied it; after which the Princess in her turn took the lute and tightened the strings and tuned it and sang these two couplets:—

Grief, care and care in my heart reside * And the fires of love in my breast abide;

My wasted form to all eyes shows clear; * For desire my body hath mortified.

Then she filled the cup and gave it to Naomi, who drank it off and taking the lute sang these two couplets:—

O to whom I gave soul which thou torturest, * And in vain I'd recover from fair Unfaith,

Do grant thy favours my care to cure * Ere I die, for this be my latest breath.

And they ceased not to sing verses and drink to the sweet sound of the strings, full of mirth and merriment and joy and jollity till behold, in came the Commander of the Faithful. Now when they saw him, they rose and kissed ground before him; and he, seeing Naomi with the lute in her hand, said to her, "O Naomi, praised be Allah who hath done away from thee sickness and suffering!" Then he looked at Ni'amah (who was still disguised as a woman), and said to the Princess, "O my sister, what damsel is this by Naomi's side?" She replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, thou hast here a handmaid, one of thy concubines and the bosom friend of Naomi, who will neither eat nor drink without her." And she repeated the words of the poet:—

Two contraries, and both concur in opposite charms, * And charms so contraried by contrast lovelier show.

Quoth the Caliph, "By Allah Omnipotent! verily she is as handsome as Naomi, and to-morrow I will appoint her a separate chamber beside that of her friend, and send her furniture and stuffs and all that befiteth her, in honour of Naomi." Then the Princess called for food and set it before her brother, who ate and made himself at home in their place and company. Then filling a cup he signed to Naomi to sing; so she took the lute, after draining two of them, and sang these two couplets:—

Since my toper-friend in my hand hath given * Three cups that brim and bubble, e'er since I've trailed my skirts throughout night for pride * As tho', Prince of the Faithful, I were thy Prince!

The Prince of True Believers was delighted, and filling another cup gave it to Naomi and bade her sing again; so after draining the cup and sweeping the strings, she sang as follows:—

O most noble of men in this time and stound, * Of whom none may boast he is equal found!
O matchless in greatness of soul and gifts, * O thou Chief, O thou King amongst all renowned:
Lord, who dalest large boons to the Lords of Earth, * Whom thou vexest not nor dost hold them bound;
The Lord preserve thee, and spoil thy foes, * And ne'er cease thy lot with good Fortune crowned!

Now when the Caliph heard these couplets, he exclaimed, "By Allah, good! By Allah, excellent! Verily the Lord hath been copious¹ to thee, O Naomi! How clever is thy tongue and how clear is thy speech!" And they ceased not their mirth and good cheer till midnight, when the Caliph's sister said to him, "Give ear, O Commander of the Faithful, to a tale I have read in books of a certain man of rank." "And what is this tale?" quoth he. Quoth she, "Know, O Prince of the Faithful, that there lived once in the city of Cufa a youth called Ni'amah, son of Al-Rabi'a, and he had a slave-girl whom he loved and who loved him. They had been reared in one bed; but when they grew up and mutual love gat hold of them, Fortune smote them with her calamities, and Time, the tyrant, brought upon them his adversity and decreed separation unto them. Thereupon designing and slanderous folk enticed her by sleight forth of his house and, stealing her away from his home, sold her to one of the Kings for ten thousand dinars. Now the girl loved her lord even as he loved her; so he left kith and kin and house and home and the gifts of fortune, and set out to search for her, and when she was found he devised means to gain access to her"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Li 'Ilâhi (darr') al-kâil, a characteristic idiom. "Darr" = giving (rich) milk copiously; and the phrase expresses admiration: "To Allah be ascribed (or Allah be praised for) his rich eloquence who said," etc. Some Hebraists would render it, "Divinely (well) did he speak who said," etc., holding "Allah" to express a superlative like "Yah" (Jah) in Gen. iv, 1; x 9. Nimrod was a hunter to the person (or presence) of Yah, i.e., mighty hunter.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph's sister said, "And Ni'amah ceased not absenting himself from his kith and kin and patrilial stead, that he might gain access to his handmaid, and he incurred every peril and lavished his life till he gained access to her, and her name was Naomi, like this slave-girl. But the interview was short; they had not been long in company when in came the King, who had bought her of her kidnapper, and hastily ordered them to be slain, without doing justice by his own soul and delaying to enquire into the matter before the command was carried out. Now what sayest thou, O Commander of the Faithful, of this King's wrongous conduct?" Answered the Caliph; "This was indeed a strange thing: it behoved that King to pardon when he had the power to punish; and he ought to have regarded three things in their favour. The first was that they loved each other; the second that they were in his house and in his grasp; and the third that it befitteth a King to be deliberate in judging and ordering between folk, and how much more so in cases where he himself is concerned! Wherefore this King thus did an unkingly deed." Then said his sister, "O my brother, by the King of the heavens and the earth, I conjure thee, bid Naomi sing and hearken to that she shall sing!" So he said, "O Naomi, sing to me"; whereupon she played a lively measure and sang these couplets:—

Beguiled us Fortune who her guile displays, * Smiting the heart, bequeathing thoughts that craze,
 And parting lovers whom she made to meet, * Till tears in torrent either cheek displays:

They were and I was and my life was glad, * While Fortune often joyed to join our ways ;
I will pour tear-flood, will rain gout's of blood. * Thy loss bemoaning through the nights and days !

Now when the Commander of the Faithful heard this verse, he was moved to great delight and his sister said to him, "O my brother, whoso decideth in aught against himself him it behoveth to abide by it and do according to his word ; and thou hast judged against thyself by this judgment." Then said she, "O Ni'amah, stand up and do thou likewise up stand, O Naomi !" So they stood up and she continued, "O Prince of True Believers, she who standeth before thee is Naomi the stolen, whom Al-Hajjaj bin Yusuf al-Sakafi kidnapped and sent to thee, falsely pretending in his letter to thee that he had bought her for ten thousand gold pieces. And this other who standeth before thee is her lord, Ni'amah, son of Al-Rabi'a ; and I beseech thee, by the honour of thy pious forbears and by Hamzah and Ukayl and Abbas,¹ to pardon them both and overlook their offence and bestow them each upon other, that thou mayst win rich reward in the next world of thy just dealing with them ; for they are under thy hand and verily they have eaten of thy meat and drunken of thy drink ; and behold ! I make intercession for them and beg of thee the boon of their blood." Thereupon quoth the Caliph, "Thou speakest sooth : I did indeed give judgment as thou sayst, and I am not one to pass sentence and to revoke it." Then said he, "O Naomi, say, be this thy lord ?" And she answered, "Even so, O Commander of the Faithful." Then quoth he, "No harm shall befall you, I give you each to other" ; adding to the young man, "O Ni'amah, who told thee where she was and taught thee how to get at this place ?" He replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, hearken to my tale and give ear to my history ; for, by the virtue of thy pious forefathers, I will hide nothing from thee !" And he told him all that had passed between himself and the Persian physician and the old nurse, and how she had brought him into the palace and he had mistaken the doors ; whereat the Caliph wondered with exceeding wonder and said, "Fetch me the Persian." So they brought him into the presence and he was made one of his chief officers. Moreover, the King bestowed on him robes of honour and ordered him a handsome present, saying, "When a man hath shown like this man such artful management, it behoveth us to make him one of our chief officers." The Caliph also loaded Ni'amah and Naomi with gifts and honours and rewarded the old nurse; and they abode with him seven days in joy and content and all delight of life, when Ni'amah craved leave to return to Cufa with his slave-girl. The Caliph gave them permission and they departed and arrived in due course at Cufa, where Ni'amah was restored to his father and mother, and they abode in all the joys and jollities of life, till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Sunderer of societies. Now when Amjad and As'ad heard from Bahram this story, they marvelled with extreme marvel and said, "By Allah, this is indeed a rare tale!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Hamzah and Abbas were the famous uncles of Mohammed often noticed ; Ukayl is not known ; possibly it may be Akil, a son of the fourth Caliph, Ali.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Amjad and As'ad heard this story from Bahram the Magian, who had become a Moslem, they marvelled with extreme marvel and thus passed that night; and when the next morning dawned they mounted, and riding to the palace sought an audience of the King, who granted it and received them with high honour. Now as they were sitting together talking, of a sudden they heard the townsfolk crying aloud and shouting to one another and calling for help; and the Chamberlain came in to the King and said to him, "Some King hath encamped before the city, he and his host, with arms and weapons displayed, and we know not their object and aim." The King took counsel with his Wazir Amjad and his brother As'ad; and Amjad said, "I will go out to him and learn the cause of his coming." So he took horse and riding forth from the city repaired to the stranger's camp, where he found the King and with him a mighty many and mounted Mamelukes. When the guards saw him they knew him for an envoy from the Sovran of the city; so they took him and brought him before their Sultan. Then Amjad kissed ground before him; but lo! the King was a Queen, who was veiled with a mouth-veil, and she said to Amjad, "Know that I have no design on this your city, and that I am come hither only in quest of a beardless slave of mine, whom if I find with you I will do you no harm; but if I find him not, then shall there be fall sore onslaught between me and you." Askel Amjad, "O Queen, what like is thy slave and what is his story and what may be his name?" Said she, "His name is As'ad and my name is Marjanah, and this slave came to my town in company of Bahram, a Magian, who refused to sell him to me; so I took him by force, but his master fell upon him by night and bore him away by stealth and he is of such and such a favour." When Amjad heard that, he knew it was indeed his brother As'ad whom she sought, and said to her, "O Queen of the Age, Alhamdulillah, praised be Allah, who hath brought us relief! Verily this slave whom thou seekest is my brother." Then he told her their story and all that had befallen them in the land of exile, and acquainted her with the cause of their departure from the Islands of Ebony, whereat she marvelled and rejoiced to have found As'ad. So she bestowed a dress of honour upon Amjad, and he returned forthright to the King and told him what had passed, at which they all rejoiced and the King went forth with Amjad and As'ad to meet Queen Marjanah. When they were admitted to her presence and sat down to converse with her and were thus pleasantly engaged, behold! a dust-cloud rose and flew and grew, till it walled the view. And after a while it lifted and showed beneath it an army dight for victory, in numbers like the swelling sea, armed and armoured cap-à-pie, who, making for the city, encompassed it around as the ring encompasseth the little finger¹; and a bared brand was in every hand. When Amjad and As'ad saw this, they exclaimed, "Verily to Allah we belong, and to Him we shall return! What is this mighty host? Doubtless, these are enemies, and except we agree with this

1 The Eastern ring is rarely plain; and, its use being that of a signet, it is always in intaglio: the Egyptians invented engraving hieroglyphics on wooden stamps for marking bricks, and applied the process to the ring. Moses B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 9) took two onyx-stones, and graved on them the names of the children of Israel. From this the signet-ring was but a step. Herodotus mentions an emerald seal set in gold, that of Polycrates, the work of Theodorus son of Telecles the Samian (iii. 141). The Egyptians also were perfectly acquainted with working in cameo (anaglyph) and rilievo, as may be seen in the cavo rilievo of the finest of their hieroglyphs. The Greeks borrowed from them the cameo and applied it to gems (e.g. Tryphon's in the Marlborough collection), and they bequeathed the art to the Romans. We read in a modern book, "Cameo means an onyx, and the most famous cameo in the world is the onyx containing the Apotheosis of Augustus." The ring is given in marriage because it was a seal by which orders were signed (Gen. xxxviii. 18, and Esther iii. 10-12). I may note that the seal-ring of Cheops (Khufu), found in the Greatest Pyramid, was in the possession of my old friend, Dr. Abbott, of Auburn (U.S.), and was sold with his collection. It is the oldest ring in the world, and settles the Cheops-question.

Queen Marjanah to fight them, they will take the town from us and slay us. There is no resource for us but to go out to them and see who they are." So Amjad arose and took horse and passed through the city-gate to Queen Marjanah's camp; but when he reached the approaching army he found it to be that of his grandsire, King Ghayur, father of his mother Queen Budur.— And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Amjad reached the approaching host, he found it to be that of his grandsire, Lord of the Isles and the Seas and the Seven Castles; and when he went into the presence he kissed ground between his hands and delivered to him the message. Quoth the King, "My name is King Ghayur and I came way-faring in quest of my daughter Budur, whom Fortune hath taken from me; for she left me and returned not to me, nor have I heard any tidings of her or of her husband Kamar al-Zaman. Have ye any news of them?" When Amjad heard this, he hung his head towards the ground for a while in thought till he felt assured that this King was none other than his grandfather, his mother's father; whereupon he raised his head and, kissing ground before him, told him that he was the son of his daughter Budur; on hearing which Ghayur threw himself upon him and they both fell a-weeping.¹ Then said Ghayur, "Praised be Allah, O my son, for safety, since I have forgathered with thee"; and Amjad told him that his daughter Budur was safe and sound, and her husband Kamar al-Zaman likewise, and acquainted him that both abode in a city called the City of Ebony. Moreover, he related to him how his father, being wroth with him and his brother, had commanded that both be put to death, but that his treasurer had taken pity on them and let them go with their lives. Quoth King Ghayur, "I will go back with thee and thy brother to your father and make your peace with him."

¹ This habit of weeping when friends meet after long parting is customary, I have noted, amongst the American "Indians," the Badawin of the New World; they shed tears thinking of the friends they have lost. Like most primitive people they are ever ready to weep, as was Æneas or Shakespeare's saline personage:—

This would make a man, a man of salt,
To use his eyes for garden waterpots.
(King Lear, iv. 6.)

So Amjad kissed the ground before him in huge delight and the King bestowed a dress of honour upon him, after which he returned, smiling, to the King of the City of the Magians and told him what he had learnt from King Ghayur, whereat he wondered with exceeding wonder. Then he despatched guest-gifts of sheep and horses and camels and forage and so forth to King Ghayur, and did the like by Queen Marjanah; and both of them told her what chanced; whereupon, quoth she, "I too will accompany you with my troops and will do my endeavour to make this peace." Meanwhile, behold! there arose another dust-cloud and flew and grew till it walled the view and blackened the day's bright hue; and under it they heard shouts and cries and neighing of steeds and beheld the glance of sword and the glint of levelled lance. When this new host drew near the city and saw the two other armies, they beat their drums and the King of the Magians exclaimed, "This is indeed naught but a blessed day. Praised be Allah, who hath made us of accord with these two armies; and if it be His will, He shall give us peace with yon other as well." Then said he to Amjad and As'ad, "Fare forth and fetch us news of these troops, for they are a mighty host, never saw I a mightier." So they opened the city gates, which the King had shut for fear of the beleaguering armies, and Amjad and As'ad went forth and, coming to the new host, found that it was indeed a mighty many. But as soon as they came to it, behold! they knew that it was the army of the King of the Ebony Islands, wherein was their father, King Kamar al-Zaman in person. Now when they looked upon him they kissed ground and wept; but when he beheld them he threw himself upon them, weeping with sore weeping, and strained them to his breast for a full hour. Then he excused himself to them and told them what desolation he had suffered for their loss and exile; and they acquainted him with King Ghayur's arrival, whereupon he mounted with his chief officers, and taking with him his two sons proceeded to that King's camp. As they drew near, one of the Princes rode forward and informed King Ghayur of Kamar al-Zaman's coming, whereupon he came out to meet him and they joined company, marvelling at these things and how they had chanced to forgather in that place. Then the townsfolk made them banquets of all manner meats and sweetmeats and presented to them horses and camels and fodder and other guest-gifts, and all that the troops needed. And while this was doing, behold! yet another cloud of dust arose and flew till it walled the view, whilst earth trembled with the tramp of steed and tabors sounded like stormy winds. After a while, the dust lifted and discovered an army clad in coats of mail and armed cap-à-pie; but all were in black garb, and in their midst rode a very old man whose beard flowed down over his breast and he also was clad in black. When the King in the city and the city-folk saw this great host, he said to the other Kings, "Praised be Allah by whose omnipotent command ye are met here, all in one day, and have proved all known one to the other ! But what vast and victorious army is this which hemmeth in the whole land like a wall ?" They answered, "Have no fear of them ; we are three Kings, each with a great army, and if they be enemies we will join thee in doing battle with them, were they three times as many as they now are." Meanwhile, up came an envoy from the approaching host making for the city. So they brought him before Kamar al-Zaman, King Ghayur, Queen Marjanah, and the King of the city ; and he kissed ground and said, "My liege lord cometh from Persia-land ; for many years ago he lost his son and he is seeking him in all countries. If he find him with you, well and good ; but if he find him not, there will be war between him and you and he will waste your city." Rejoined Kamar al-Zaman, "It shall not come to that ; but how is thy master called in Ajam-land ?" Answered the envoy, "He is called King Shahrman, lord of the Khalidan Islands ; and he hath levied these troops in the lands traversed by him, whilst seeking his son." Now when Kamar al-Zaman heard these words, he cried out with a great cry and fell down in a fainting fit which lasted a long while ; and anon coming to himself he wept bitter tears, and said to Amjad and As'ad, "Go ye, O my sons, with the herald ; salute your grandfather and my father, King Shahrman, and give him glad tidings of me, for he mourneth my loss and even to the present time he weareth black raiment for my sake." Then he told the other Kings all that had befallen him in the days of his youth, at which they wondered and going down with him from the city, repaired to his father, whom he saluted, and they embraced and fell to the ground senseless for excess of joy. And when they revived after a while, Kamar al-Zaman acquainted his father with all his adventures and the other Kings saluted Shahrman. Then, after having married Marjanah to As'ad, they sent her back to her kingdom, charging her not to cease correspondence with them ; so she took leave and went her way. Moreover, they married Amjad to Bostan, Bahram's daughter, and they all set out for the City of Ebony. And when they arrived there, Kamar al-Zaman went in to his father-in-law, King Armanus, and told him all that had befallen him and how he had found his sons; whereat Armanus rejoiced and gave him joy of his safe return. Then King Ghayur went in to his daughter, Queen Budur,¹ and saluted her and quenched his longing for her company, and they all abode a full month's space in the City of Ebony; after which the King and his daughter returned to their own country,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Forty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that King Ghayur set out with his daughter and his host for his own land, and they took with them Amjad and returned home by easy marches. And when Ghayur was settled again in his kingdom, he made his grandson king in his stead; and as to Kamar al-Zaman, he also made As'ad king in his room over the capital of the Ebony Islands, with the consent of his grandfather, King Armanus, and set out himself, with his father King Shahrman, till the two made the Islands of Khalidan. Then the lieges decorated the city in their honour and they ceased not to beat the drums for glad tidings a whole month; nor did Kamar al-Zaman leave to govern in his father's place till there overtook them the Destroyer of delights and the Sunderer of societies; and Allah knoweth all things! Quoth King Shahryar, "O Shahrazad, this is indeed a most wonderful tale!" And she answered, "O King, it is not more wonderful than that of

ALA AL-DIN ABU AL-SHAMAT.²

"WHAT is that?" asked he, and she said, It hath reached me that there lived, in times of yore and years and ages long gone before, a merchant of Cairo³ named Shams al-Din, who was of the best and truest-spoken of the traders of the city; and he had eunuchs and servants and negro-slaves and handmaids and Mamelukes and great store of money. Moreover, he was Consul¹ of the Merchants of Cairo and owned a wife, whom he loved and who loved him; except that he had lived with her forty years, yet had not been blessed with a son or even a daughter. One day, as he sat in his shop, he noted that the merchants, each and every, had a son or two sons or more sitting in their shops like their sires. Now the day being Friday he entered the Hammam-bath and made the total ablution: after which he came out and took the barber's glass and looked in it, saying, "I testify that there is no god but the God, and I testify that Mohammed is the Messenger of God!" Then he considered his beard, and seeing that the white hairs in it covered the black, bethought himself that hoariness is the harbinger of death. Now his wife knew the time of his coming home and had washed and made herself ready for him, so when he came in to her, she said, "Good evening," but he replied, "I see no good." Then she called to the handmaid, "Spread the supper-tray"; and when this was done quoth she to her husband, "Sup, O my lord." Quoth he, "I will eat nothing," and pushing the tray away with his foot, turned his back upon her. She asked, "Why dost thou thus? and what hath vexed thee?" and he answered, "Thou art the cause of my vexation."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Here poetical justice is not done; in most Arab tales the two adulterous Queens would have been put to death.

² Pronounce Aladdin Abush-Shāmât.

³ Arab. "Misr" vulg. Masr: a close connection of Misraim—the "two Misrs," Egypt, upper and lower.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fiftieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Shams al-Din said to his wife, "Thou art the cause of my vexation." She asked, "Wherefore?" and he answered, "When I opened my shop this morning, I saw that each and every of the merchants had with him a son or two sons or more, sitting in their shops like their fathers; and I said to myself:—He who took thy sire will not spare thee. Now the night I first visited thee,² thou madest me swear that I would never take a second wife over thee nor a concubine, Abyssinian or Greek or handmaid of other race; nor would lie a single night away from thee; and behold, thou art barren." Rejoined she, "Allah is my witness that the fault lies with thee that thou canst not get women with child nor beget children." So he slept with her that night and arose on the morrow, repenting of having spoken angrily to her; and she also regretted her cross words. Then he went to the market and, finding a druggist, saluted him; and, when his salutation was returned, he put his case before him, but with no avail. Then Shams al-Din made the round till he had asked every one, but they all laughed at him, and presently he returned to his shop and sat down, sore troubled. Now there was in the bazar a man who was Deputy Syndic of the brokers and was given to the use of opium and electuary and green hashish.¹ He was called Shaykh Mohammed Samsan, and being poor he used to wish Shams al-Din good morrow every day. So he came to him according to his custom and saluted him. The merchant returned his salute, but in ill-temper, and the other, seeing him vexed, said, "O my lord, what hath crossed thee?" Thereupon Shams al-Din told him all that occurred between himself and his wife, adding, "These forty years have I been married to her yet hath she borne me neither son nor daughter, so I have been seeking a something wherewith to avail thereto but found it not." Quoth Shaykh Mohammed, "O my lord, I have that which thou seekest, but what wilt thou say to him who causeth thy wife to conceive by thee after these forty years have passed?" Answered the merchant, "If thou do this, I will work thy weal and reward thee." "Then give me a dinar," rejoined the broker, and Shams al-Din said, "Take these two dinars." He took them and said, "Give me also yonder big bowl of porcelain." So he gave it to him and the broker betook himself to a hashish-seller, of whom he bought two ounces of concentrated Roubi opium and equal parts of Chinese cubebs, cinnamon, cloves, cardamoms, ginger, white pepper and mountain skink¹; and, pounding them all together, boiled them in sweet olive-oil; after which he added three ounces of male frankincense in fragments and a cupful of coriander-seed; and, macerating the whole, made it into an electuary with Roubi bee-honey. Then he put the confection in the bowl and carried it to the merchant, to whom he delivered it, saying, "Here is the seed-thickener, and the manner of using it is this. Take of my electuary with a spoon after supping, and wash it down with a sherbet made of rose conserve; but first sup off mutton and house-pigeon plentifully seasoned and hotly spiced." So the merchant bought all this and sent the meat and pigeons to his wife, saying, "Dress them deftly and lay up the confection until I want it and call for it." She did his bidding and when she served up the meats he ate the evening meal, after which he called for the bowl and ate of the electuary. It pleased him well, so he ate the rest and knew his wife. That very night she conceived by him and after three months she knew that she was with child. When the days of her pregnancy was accomplished, the pangs of labour took

¹ The Persians still call their Consuls "Shah-bandar," lit. king of the Bandar or port.

² Arab. "Dukhûl," the night of going in, of seeing the bride unveiled for the first time, et cætera.

¹ Arab. 'Barsh' or Bars," the commonest kind. In India it is called Ma'jún = electuary, generally): it is made of Gánjá or young leaves, buds, capsules and florets of hemp (C. sativa), poppy-seed and flowers of the thorn-apple (datura) with milk and sugar-candy, nutmegs, cloves, mace and saffron, all boiled to the consistency of treacle, which hardens when cold. Several recipes are given by Herklots (Glossary s. v. Majoon). These electuaries are usually prepared with "Charas," or gum of hemp, collected by hand or by passing a blanket over the plant in early morning: it is highly intoxicating. Another aphrodisiac is "Sabzi," dried hemp-leaves, poppy-seed, cucumber-seed, black pepper and cardamoms rubbed down in a mortar with a wooden pestle, and made drinkable by adding milk, ice-cream, etc. The Hashish of Arabia is the Hindustani Bhang, usually drunk and made as follows. Take of hemp-leaves, well washed, 3 drams, black pepper 45 grains; and of cloves, nutmeg, and mace (which add to the intoxication) each 12 grains. Triturate in 8 ounces of water, or the juice of water-melon or cucumber, strain, and drink. The Egyptian Zabibah is a preparation of hemp-florets, opium, and honey, much affected by the lower orders, whence the proverb: "Temper thy sorrow with Zabibah." In Al-Hijaz it is mixed with raisins (Zabib) and smoked in the water-pipe. (Burckhardt, No 73). Besides these there are (1) "Post," poppy-seed prepared in various ways, but especially in sugared sherbets; (2) Datura (stramonium) seed, the produce of the thorn-apple, bleached and put into sweetmeats by dishonest confectioners; it is a dangerous intoxicant, producing spectral visions, delirium tremens, etc.; and (3) various preparations of opium, especially the "Madad," pills made up with toasted betel-leaf and smoked. Opium, however, is usually drunk in the shape of "Kusumbá," a pill placed in wet cotton and squeezed in order to strain and clean it of the cow-dung and other filth with which it is adulterated.

1 Arab. "Sikankûr" (Gr. Σκίγκος, Lat. Scincus) a lizard (S. officinalis) which, held in the hand, still acts as an aphrodisiac in the East, and which in the Middle Ages was considered a universal medicine. In the "Adjâib al-Hind" (Les Merveilles de l'Inde) we find a notice of a bald-headed old man who found much vigour in consequence of having eaten a certain fish. (Chapt. lxxviii. of the translation by M. L. Marcel Devic, from a manuscript of the tenth century; Paris, Lemaire, 1878.) Europeans deride these prescriptions, but Easterns know better: they affect the fancy, that is, the brain; and often succeed in temporarily relieving impotence. The recipes for this evil, which is incurable only when it comes from heart-affections, are innumerable in the East, and about half of every medical work is devoted to them. Many a quack has made his fortune with a few bottles of tincture of cantharides, and a man who could discover a specific would become a millionaire in India alone. The curious reader will consult for specimens the Ananga-Ranga Shastra, by Koka Pandit: or the "Rujû 'al-Shaykh ila 'l-Sabâh fi Kuwwati 'l-Bâh" ('The Return of the Old Man to Youth in power of Procreation) by Ahmad bin Sulaymân, known as Ibn Kamâl Báshâ in 139 chapters lithographed at Cairo. Of these aphrodisiacs I shall have more to say.

her and they raised loud lulliloings and cries of joy. The midwife delivered her with difficulty, by pronouncing over the boy at his birth the names of Mohammed and Ali, and said, "Allah is Most Great!" and she called in his ear the call to prayer. Then she wrapped him up and passed him to his mother, who took him and gave him the breast; and he sucked and was full and slept. The midwife abode with them three days, till they had made the mothering-cakes of sugared bread and sweetmeats; and they distributed them on the seventh day. Then they sprinkled salt against the evil eye and the merchant, going in to his wife, gave her joy of her safe delivery, and said, "Where is Allah's deposit?" So they brought him a babe of surpassing beauty, the handiwork of the Orderer who is ever present and, though he was but seven days old, those who saw him would have deemed him a yearling child. So the merchant looked on his face and, seeing it like a shining full moon, with moles on either cheek, said he to his wife, "What hast thou named him?" Answered she, "If it were a girl I had named her; but this is a boy, so none shall name him but thou." Now the people of that time used to name their children by omens; and, whilst the merchant and his wife were taking counsel of the name, behold! one said to his friend, "Ho my lord, Alá al-Din!" So the merchant said, "We will call him Ala al-Din Abú al-Shámát.¹" Then he committed the child to the nurse, and he drank milk two years, after which they weaned him and he grew up and throve and walked upon the floor. When he came to seven years old, they put him in a chamber under a trap-door, for fear of the evil eye, and his father said, "He shall not come out till his beard grow." So he gave him in charge to a handmaid and a blackamoor; the girl dressed him his meals and the slave carried them to him. Then his father circumcised him and made him a great feast; after which he brought him a doctor of the law, who taught him to write and read and repeat the Koran, and other arts and sciences, till he became a good scholar and an accomplished. One day it so came to pass that the slave, after bringing him the tray of food, went away and left the trap-door open: so Ala al-Din came forth from the vault and went in to his mother, with whom was a company of women of rank. As they sat talking, behold! in came upon them the youth as he were a white slave drunken¹ for the excess of his beauty; and when they saw him, they veiled their faces and said to his mother, "Allah requite thee, O Such an one! How canst thou let this strange Mameluke in upon us? Knowest thou not that modesty is a point of the Faith?" She replied, "Pronounce Allah's name² and cry Bismillah! this is my son, the fruit of my vitals and the heir of Consul Shams al-Din, the child of the nurse and the collar and the crust and the crumb."³ Quoth they, "Never in our days knew we that thou hadst a son"; and quoth she, "Verily his father feared for him the evil eye and reared him in an underground chamber";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Alá al-Din (our old friend Aladdin) = Glory of the Faith, a name of which Mohammed, who preferred the simplest, like his own, would have highly disapproved. The most grateful names to Allah are Abdallah (Allah's Slave) and Abd al-Rahmán (Slave of the Compassionate); the truest are Al-Háarith (the gainer, "bread-winner") and Al-Hammám (the griever); and the hatefulest are Al-Harb (witch) and Al-Murrah (bitterness, Abu Murrah being a kunyat or by-name of the Devil). Abu al-Shámát (pronounced Abush-Shámát) = Father of Moles, concerning which I have already given details. These names ending in -Din (faith) began with the Caliph Al-Muktadi Li-Amri 'Ilah (regn. A.H. 467 = 1075), who entitled his Wazir "Zahir al-Din" (Backer or Defender of the Faith) and this gave rise to the practice. It may be observed that the superstition of naming by omens is in no way obsolete.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din's mother said to her lady-friends, "Verily his father feared for him the evil eye and reared him in an underground chamber; and haply the slave forgot to shut the door and he fared forth; but we did not mean that he should come out before his beard was grown." The women gave her joy of him, and the youth went out from them into the court yard, where he seated himself in the open sitting-room; and behold! in came the slaves with his father's she-mule, and he said to them, "Whence cometh this mule?" Quoth they, "We escorted thy father when riding her to the shop, and we have brought her back." He asked, "What may be my father's trade?" and they answered, "Thy father is Consul of the merchants in the land of Egypt, and Sultan of the Sons of the Arabs." Then he went in to his mother and said to her, "O my mother, what is my father's trade?" Said she, "O my son, thy sire is a merchant and Consul of the merchants in the land of Egypt and Sultan of the Sons of the Arabs. His slaves consult him not in selling aught whose price is less than one thousand gold pieces, but goods worth him an hundred and less they sell at their own discretion; nor doth any merchandise whatever, little or muchel, leave the country without passing through his hands and he disposeth of it as he pleaseth; nor is a bale packed and sent abroad amongst folk but what is under his disposal. And Almighty Allah, O my son! hath given thy father moneys past compt." He rejoined, "O my mother, praised be Allah! that I am son of the Sultan of the Sons of the Arabs and that my father is Consul of the merchants! But why, O my mother, do ye put me in the underground chamber and leave me prisoner there?" Quoth she, "O my son, we imprisoned thee not save for fear of folks' eyes: 'the evil eye is a truth,' and most of those in their long homes are its victims." Quoth he, "O my mother, and where is a refuge-place against Fate? Verily care never made Destiny forbear, nor is there flight from what is writ for every wight. He who took my grandfather will not spare myself nor my father for, though he live to-day, he shall not live to-morrow. And when my father dieth and I come forth and say:—I am Ala al-Din, son of Shams al-Din the merchant, none of the people will believe me, but men of years and standing will say:—In our lives never saw we a son or a daughter of Shams al-Din. Then the public Treasury will come down and take my father's estate, and Allah have mercy on him who said:—The noble dieth and his wealth passeth away, and the meanest of men take his women. Therefore, O my mother, speak thou to my father, that he carry me with him to the bazar and open for me a shop; so I may sit there with my merchandise and teach me to buy and sell and take and give." Answered his mother, "O my son, as soon as thy sire returneth I will tell him this." So when the merchant came home, he found his son Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat sitting with his mother and said to her, "Why hast thou brought him forth of the underground chamber?" She replied, "O son of my uncle, it was not I that brought him out; but the servants forgot to shut the door and left it open; so, as I sat with a company of women of rank, behold! he came forth and walked in to me." Then she went on to repeat to him his son's words; so he said, "O my son, to-morrow, Inshallah! I will take thee with me to the bazar; but, my boy, sitting in markets and shops demandeth good manners and courteous carriage in all conditions." Ala al-Din passed the night rejoicing in his father's promise and when the morrow came, the merchant carried him to the Hammam and clad him in a suit worth a mint of money. As soon as they had broken their fast and drunk their sherbets, Shams al-Din mounted his she-mule and putting his son upon another rode to the market, followed by his boy. But when the market-folk saw their Consul making towards them, foregoing a youth, as he were a slice of the full moon on the fourteenth night, they said, one to other, "See thou yonder boy behind the Consul of the merchants; verily, we thought well of him, but he is, like the leek, gray of head and green at heart.¹" And Shaykh Mohammed Samson, Deputy Syndic of the market, the man before mentioned, said to the dealers, "O merchants, we will not keep the like of him for our Shaykh; no, never!" Now it was the custom anent the Consul when he came from his house of a morning and sat down in his shop, for the Deputy Syndic of the market to go and recite to him and to all the merchants assembled around him the Fátihah or opening chapter of the Koran,² after which they accosted him one by one and wished him good morrow and went away, each to his business-place. But when Shams al-Din seated himself in his shop that day as usual, the traders came not to him as accustomed; so he called the Deputy and said to him, "Why come not the merchants together as usual?" Answered Mohammed Samson, "I know not how to tell thee these troubles, for they have agreed to depose thee from the Shaykh-ship of the market and to recite the Fatihah to thee

¹ Meaning that he appeared intoxicated by the pride of his beauty as though it had been strong wine.

² i.e. against the evil eye.

³ Meaning that he had been delicately reared.

1 So Boccaccio's "Capo bianco" and "Coda verde." (Day iv., Introduit.)

2 The opening chapter is known as the "Mother of the Book" (as opposed to Yá Sin, the "heart of the Koran"), the Surat (chapter) of Praise, and the Surat of repetition" (because twice revealed?) or thanksgiving, or laudation (Al-Masáni) and by a host of other names, for which see Mr. Rodwell, who, however, should not write "Fatihah" (p. xxv.) nor "Fathah" (xxvii.). The Fátihah, which is to Al-Islam much what the "Paternoster" is to Christendom, consists of seven verses, in the usual Sa'j'a or rhymed prose, and I have rendered it as follows:—

In the name of the Compassionating, the Compassionate! * Praise be to Allah who all the worlds made * The Compassionating, the Compassionate * King of the Day of Faith! * Thee only do we adore, and of Thee only do we crave aid * Guide us to the path which is straight * The path of those for whom Thy love is great, not those on whom is hate, nor they that deviate * Amen! O Lord of the World's trine.

My Pilgrimage (i. 285; ii. 78 and passim) will supply instances of its application; how it is recited with open hands to catch the blessing from heaven, and the palms are drawn down the face (ibid., i. 280), and other details.

no more." Asked Shams al-Din, "What may be their reason?" and asked the Deputy, "What boy is this that sitteth by thy side and thou a man of years and chief of the merchants? Is this lad a Mameluke or akin to thy wife? Verily, I think thou lovest him and inclinest lewdly to the boy." Thereupon the Consul cried out at him, saying, "Silence, Allah curse thee, genus and species! This is my son." Rejoined the Deputy, "Never in our born days have we seen thee with a son"; and Shams al-Din answered, "When thou gavest me the electuary my wife conceived and bare this youth; but I reared him in a souterrain for fear of the evil eye, nor was it my purpose that he should come forth till he could take his beard in his hand.¹ However, his mother would not agree to this, and he on his part begged I would stock him a shop and teach him to sell and buy." So the Deputy Syndic returned to the other traders and acquainted them with the truth of the case, whereupon they all arose to accompany him; and, going in a body to Shams al-Din's shop, stood before him and recited the "Opener" of the Koran; after which they gave him joy of his son and said to him, "The Lord prosper root and branch! But even the poorest of us, when son or daughter is born to him, needs must cook a pan-full of custard² and bid his friends and kith and kin; yet hast thou not done this." Quoth he, "This I owe you; be our meeting in the garden."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-second Night,

Her sister Dunyazad said to her, "Pray continue thy story for us, an thou be awake and not inclined to sleep." Quoth she:—With pleasure and goodwill: it hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Consul of the merchants promised them a banquet and said, "Be our meeting in the garden." So when morning dawned he despatched the carpet-layer to the saloon of the garden-pavilion and bade him furnish the two. Moreover, he sent thither all that was needful for cooking, such as sheep and clarified butter and so forth, according to the requirements of the case; and spread two

¹ i.e. when the evil eye has less effect than upon children. Strangers in Cairo often wonder to see a woman richly dressed leading by the hand a filthy little boy (rarely a girl) in rags, which at home will be changed to cloth of gold.

² Arab. "Asidah," flour made consistent by boiling in water with the addition of "Samn" (clarified butter) and honey: more like pap than custard.

tables, one in the pavilion and another in the saloon. Then Shams al-Din and his boy guided themselves, and he said to Ala al-Din, "O my son, whenas a greybeard entereth, I will meet him and seat him at the table in the pavilion; and do thou, in like manner, receive the beardless youths and seat them at the table in the saloon." He asked, "O my father, why dost thou spread two tables, one for men and another for youths?" and he answered, "O my son, the beardless is ashamed to eat with the bearded." And his son thought this his answer full and sufficient. So when the merchants arrived, Shams al-Din received the men and seated them in the pavilion, whilst Ala al-Din received the youths and seated them in the saloon. Then the food was set on and the guests ate and drank and made merry and sat over their wine, whilst the attendants perfumed them with the smoke of scented woods, and the elders fell to conversing of matters of science and traditions of the Prophet. Now there was amongst them a merchant called Mahmúd of Balkh, a professing Moslem but at heart a Magian, a man of lewd and mischievous life who loved boys. And when he saw Ala al-Din, from whose father he used to buy stuffs and merchandise, one sight of his face sent him a thousand sighs, and Satan dangled the jewel before his eyes, so that he was taken with love-longing and desire and affection, and his heart was filled with mad passion for him. Presently he arose and made for the youths, who stood up to receive him; and at this moment Ala al-Din, being taken with an urgent call of nature, withdrew to make water; whereupon Mahmud turned to the other youths and said to them, "If ye will incline Ala al-Din's mind to journeying with me I will give each of you a dress worth a power of money." Then he returned from them to the men's party; and, as the youths were sitting, Ala al-Din suddenly came back, when all rose to receive him and seated him in the place of highest honour. Presently, one of them said to his neighbour, "O my lord Hasan, tell me whence came to thee the capital whereon thou tradest?" He replied, "When I grew up and came to man's estate, I said to my sire:—O my father, give me merchandise. Quoth he:—O my son, I have none by me; but go thou to some merchant and take of him money and traffic with it; and so learn to buy and sell, give and take. So I went to one of the traders and borrowed of him a thousand dinars, wherewith I bought stuffs and carrying them to Damascus sold them there at a profit of two for one. Then I bought Syrian stuffs and carrying them to Aleppo, made a similar gain of them; after which I bought stuffs of Aleppo and repaired with them to Baghdad, where I sold them with like result, two for one; nor did I cease trading upon my capital till I was worth nigh ten thousand ducats." Then each of the others told his friend some such tale, till it came to Ala al-Din's turn to speak, when they said to him, "And thou, O my lord Ala al-Din?" Quoth he, "I was brought up in a chamber underground and came forth from it only this week; and I do but go to the shop and return home from the shop." They remarked, "Thou art used to wone at home and wottest not the joys of travel, by cause that travel is for men only." He replied, "I reckon not of voyaging, and wayfaring doth not tempt me." Whereupon quoth one to the other, "This one is like the fish; when he leaveth the water he dieth." Then they said to him, "O Ala al-Din, the glory of the sons of the merchants is not but in travel for the sake of gain." Their talk angered him; so he left them weeping-eyed and heavy-hearted and mounting his mule returned home. Now his mother saw him in tears and in bad temper and asked him, "What hath made thee weep, O my son?" and he answered, "Of a truth, all the sons of the merchants put me to shame and said:—Naught is more glorious for a merchant's son than travel for gain and to get him gold."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din said to his mother, "Of a truth all the sons of the merchants put me to shame and said:—Naught is more honourable for a merchant's son than travel for gain." "O my son, hast thou a mind to travel?" "Even so!" "And whither wilt thou go?" "To the city of Baghdad; for there folk make double the cost-price on their goods." "O my son, thy father is a very rich man, and if he provide thee not with merchandise, I will supply it out of my own moneys." "The best favour is that which is soonest bestowed; if this kindness is to be, now is the time." So she called the slaves and sent them for cloth-packers; then, opening a store-house, brought out ten loads of stuffs, which they made up into bales for him. Such was his case; but as regards his father, Shams al-Din, he looked about and failed to find Ala al-Din in the garden, and enquiring after him was told that he had mounted mule and gone home; so he too mounted and followed him. Now when he entered the house, he saw the bales ready bound, and asked what they were; whereupon his wife told him what had chanced between Ala al-Din and the sons of the merchants; and he cried, "O my son, Allah's malison on travel and stranger-hood! Verily Allah's Apostle (whom the Lord bless and preserve!) hath said:—It is of a man's happy fortune that he eat his daily bread in his own land; and it was said of the ancients:—Leave travel, though but for a mile." Then quoth he to his son, "Say, art thou indeed resolved to travel and wilt thou not turn back from it?" Quoth the other, "There is no help for it but that I journey to Baghdad with merchandise, else will I doff clothes and don dervish gear and fare a-wandering over the world." Shams al-Din rejoined, "I am no penniless pauper but have great plenty of wealth"; then he showed him all he owned of moneys and stuffs and stock-in-trade, and observed, "With me are stuffs and merchandise befitting every country in the world." Then he showed him, among the rest, forty bales ready bound, with the price, a thousand dinars, written on each, and said, "O my son, take these forty loads, together with the ten which thy mother gave thee, and set out under the safeguard of Almighty Allah. But, O my child, I fear for thee a certain wood in thy way, called the Lion's Copse,¹ and a valley hight the Vale of Dogs, for there lives are lost without mercy." He said, "How so, O my father?" and he replied, "Because of a Badawi bandit named Ajlân." Quoth Ala al-Din, "Such is Allah's luck; if any share of it be mine, no harm shall hap to me." Then they rode to the cattle-bazar, where behold! a cameleer² alighted from his she-mule and, kissing the Consul's hand, said to him, "O my lord, it is long, by Allah! since thou hast employed us in the way of business." He replied, "Every time hath its fortune and its men,³ and Allah have ruth on him who said⁴:—

And the old man crept o'er the worldly ways * So bowed, his beard o'er his knees down flow'th :

Quoth I :—What gars thee so doubled go ? * Quoth he (as to me his hands he show'th)

My youth is lost, in the dust it lieth ; * And see, I bend me to find my youth."

¹ Arab. " Ghâbah " = I have explained as a low-lying place where the growth is thickest, and consequently animals haunt it during the noon-heats.

² Arab. " Akkâm," one who loads camels and has charge of the luggage. He also corresponds with the modern Mukharrij, or camel-hirer (Pilgrimage, i. 339); and hence the word Moucre (Moucres), which, first used by La Brocquière (A.D. 1432), is still the only term known to the French.

³ i e, I am old and can no longer travel.

⁴ Taken from Al-Asma'i, the " Romance of Antar," and the episode of the Asafir Camels.

Now when he had ended his verses, he said, "O chief of the caravan, it is not I who am minded to travel, but this my son." Quoth the cameleer, "Allah save him for thee!" Then the Consul made a contract between Ala al-Din and the man, appointing that the youth should be to him as a son, and gave him into his charge, saying, "Take these hundred gold pieces for thy people." Moreover, he bought his son threescore mules and a lamp and a tomb-covering for the Sayyid Abd al-Kadir of Gílân¹ and said to him, "O my son, while I am absent, this is thy sire in my stead: whatsoever he biddeth thee, do thou obey him." So saying, he returned home with the mules and servants, and that night they made a Khitmah or perlection of the Koran, and held a festival in honour of the Shaykh Abd al-Kadir al-Jiláni. And when the morrow dawned, the Consul gave his son ten thousand dinars, saying, "O my son, when thou comest to Baghdad, if thou find stuffs easy of sale, sell them; but if they be dull spend of these dinars." Then they loaded the mules and taking leave of one another, all the wayfarers set out on their journey, and marched forth the city. Now Mahmud of Balkh had made ready his own venture for Baghdad and had moved his bales and set up his tents without the walls, saying in himself, "Thou shalt not enjoy this youth but in the desert, where there is neither spy nor marplot to trouble thee." It chanced that he had in hand a thousand dinars which he owed to the youth's father, the balance of a business transaction between them; so he went and bade farewell to the Consul, who charged him, "Give the thousand dinars to my son Ala al-Din"; and commended the lad to his care, saying, "He is as it were thy son." Accordingly, Ala al-Din joined company with Mahmud of Balkh—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din joined company with Mahmud of Balkh who before beginning the march charged the youth's cook to dress nothing for him, but himself provided him and his company with meat and drink. Now he had four houses, one in Cairo, another in Damascus, a third in Aleppo, and a fourth in Baghdad. So they set out and ceased not journeying over waste and wold till they drew near Damascus, when Mahmud sent his slave to Ala al-Din, whom he found sitting and reading. He went up to him and kissed his hands, and Ala al-Din having asked him what he wanted, he answered, "My master saluteth thee and craveth thy company to a banquet at his place." Quoth the youth, "Not till I consult my father Kamāl al-Din, the captain of the caravan." So he asked advice of the Makaddam,¹ who said, "Do not go." Then they left Damascus and journeyed on till they came to Aleppo, where Mahmud made a second entertainment and sent to invite Ala al-Din; but he consulted the Chief Cameleer, who again forbade him. Then they marched from Aleppo and fared on, till there remained between them and Baghdad only a single stage. Here Mahmud prepared a third feast and sent to bid Ala al-Din to it: Kamāl al-Din once more forbade his accepting it, but he said, "I must needs go." So he rose and slinging a sword over his shoulder under his clothes, repaired to the tent of Mahmud of Balkh, who came to meet him and saluted him. Then he set before him a sumptuous repast, and they ate and drank and washed hands. At last Mahmud bent towards Ala al-Din to snatch a kiss from him, but the youth received the kiss on the palm of his hand and said to him, "What wouldst thou be doing?" Quoth Mahmud, "In very sooth I brought thee hither that I might take my pleasure with thee in this jousting-ground, and we will comment upon the words of him who saith:—

¹ A Mystic of the twelfth century A.D., who founded the Kádírí order (the oldest and chiefest of the four universally recognised), to which I have the honour to belong, teste my diploma (Pilgrimage, Appendix i). Visitation is still made to his tomb at Baghdad. The Arabs (who have no hard g-letter) alter to "Jílân," the name of his birth-place "Gílân," a tract between the Caspian and the Black Seas.

Say, canst not come to us one momentling, * Like milk of ewekin or aught glistening,
 And eat what liketh thee of dainty cate, * And take thy due of fee in silverling,
 And bear whatso thou wilt, without mislike, * Of spanling, fistling, or a span-long thing?"

Then Mahmud of Balkh would have laid hands on Ala al-Din to ravish him; but he rose and baring his brand, said to him, "Shame on thy gray hairs! Hast thou no fear of Allah and He of exceeding awe? May He have mercy on him who saith:—

¹ The well-known Anglo-Indian "Mucuddum"; lit., "one placed before (or over) others"; an overseer.

² Koran, xiii. 14.

Preserve thy hoary hairs from soil and stain, * For whitest colours are the easiest stained ! ”

And when he ended his verses he said to Mahmud of Balkh, “ Verily this merchandise¹ is a trust from Allah and may not be sold. If I sold this property to other than thyself for gold, I would sell it to thee for silver ; but by Allah, O filthy villain, I will never again company with thee ; no, never ! ” Then he returned to Kamal al-Din the guide, and said to him, “ Yonder man is a lewd fellow, and I will no longer consort with him nor suffer his company by the way.” He replied, “ O my son, did I not say to thee :—Go not near him ? But if we part company with him, I fear destruction for ourselves ; so let us still make one caravan.” But Ala al-Din cried, “ It may not be that I ever again travel with him.” So he loaded his beasts and journeyed onwards, he and his company, till they came to a valley, where Ala al-Din would have halted, but the Cameleer said to him, “ Do not halt here ; rather let us fare forwards and press our pace, so haply we make Baghdad before the gates are closed, for they open and shut them with the sun, in fear lest the Rejectors² should take the city and throw the books of religious learning into the Tigris.” But Ala al-Din replied to him, “ O my father, I came not forth from home with this merchandise, or travelled hither for the sake of traffic, but to divert myself with the sight of foreign lands and folks ” ; and he rejoined, “ O my son, we fear for thee and for thy goods from the wild Arabs.” Whereupon the youth answered, “ Harkye, fellow, art thou master or man ? I will not enter Baghdad till the morning, that the sons of the city may see my merchandise and know me.” “ Do as thou wilt,” said the other ; “ I have given thee the wisest advice, but thou art the best judge of thine own case.” Then Ala al-Din bade them unload the mules and pitch the tent ; so they did his

1 i.e., his chastity : this fashion of objecting to infamous proposals is very characteristic : ruder races would use their fists.

2 Arab. “ Rāfīzī ” = the Shi’ah (tribe, sect) or Persian schismatics, who curse the first three Caliphs : the name is taken from their own saying, “ Innā rafiznā-hum ” = verily we have rejected them. The feeling between Sunni (the so-called orthodox) and Shi’ah is much like the Christian love between a Catholic of Cork and a Protestant from the Black North. As Al-Siyuti or any historian will show, this sect became exceedingly powerful under the later Abbaside Caliphs, many of whom conformed to it and adopted its practices and innovations (as in the Azan or prayer-call), greatly to the scandal of their co-religionists. Even in the present day the hatred between these representatives of Arab monotheism and Persian Guebrism continues unabated. I have given sundry instances in my Pilgrimage, e.g. how the Persians attempt to pollute the tombs of the Caliphs they abhor.

bidding and abode there till the middle of the night, when he went out to obey a call of nature and suddenly saw something gleaming afar off. So he said to Kamal al-Din, "O captain, what is yonder glittering?" The Cameleer sat up and considering it straitly, knew it for the glint of spear-heads and the steel of Badawi weapons and swords. And lo and behold! this was a troop of wild Arabs under a chief called Ajlán Abú Náib, Shaykh of the Arabs, and when they neared the camp and saw the bales and baggage, they said one to another, "O night of loot!" Now when Kamal al-Din heard these their words he cried, "Avaunt, O vilest of Arabs!" But Abu Naib so smote him with his throw-spear in the breast, that the point came out gleaming from his back, and he fell down dead at the tent-door. Then cried the water-carrier,¹ "Avaunt, O foulest of Arabs!" and one of them smote him with a sword upon the shoulder, that it issued shining from the tendons of the throat, and he also fell down dead. (And all this while Ala al-Din stood looking on.) Then the Badawin surrounded and charged the caravan from every side and slew all Ala al-Din's company without sparing a man: after which they loaded the mules with the spoil and made off. Quoth Ala al-Din to himself, "Nothing will slay thee save thy mule and thy dress!" so he arose and put off his gown and threw it over the back of a mule, remaining in his shirt and bag-trousers only; after which he looked towards the tent-door and seeing there a pool of gore flowing from the slaughtered wallowed in it with his remaining clothes till he was as a slain man drowned in his own blood. Thus it fared with him; but as regards the Shaykh of the wild Arabs, Ajlan, he said to his banditti, "O Arabs, was this caravan bound from Egypt for Baghdad or from Baghdad for Egypt?"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Badawi asked his banditti, "O Arabs, was this caravan bound from Egypt for Baghdad or from Baghdad for Egypt?" they answered, "'Twas bound from Egypt for Baghdad"; and ¹ Arab. "Sakká," the Indian "Bihishtí" (man from Heaven); each party in a caravan has one or more.

No. 20.

Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat.

“One of the Badawin levelled his javelin and would have plunged it into his breast when he cried out . . . and behold! he saw a hand turn the lance away from his breast.”

he said, "Return ye to the slain, for methinks the owner of this caravan is not dead." So they turned back to the slain and fell to prodding and slashing them with lance and sword till they came to Ala al-Din, who had thrown himself down among the corpses. And when they came to him, quoth they, "Thou dost but feign thyself dead, but we will make an end of thee," and one of the Badawin levelled his javelin and would have plunged it into his breast when he cried out, "Save me, O my lord Abd al-Kadir, O Saint of Gilan!" and behold! he saw a hand turn the lance away from his breast to that of Kamal al-Din the cameleer, so that it pierced him and spared himself.¹ Then the Arabs made off; and when Ala al-Din saw that the birds were flown with their god-send he sat up and finding no one, rose and set off running; but, behold! Abu Naib the Badawi looked back and said to his troop, "I see somewhat moving afar off, O Arabs!" So one of the bandits turned back and, spying Ala al-Din running, called out to him, saying, "Flight shall not forward thee and we after thee"; and he smote his mare with his heel and she hastened after him. Then Ala al-Din seeing before him a watering tank and a cistern beside it, climbed up into a niche in the cistern and stretching himself at full length feigned to be asleep and said, "O gracious Protector, cover me with the veil of Thy protection which may not be torn away!" And lo! the Badawi came up to the cistern and standing in his stirrups, put out his hand to lay hold of Ala al-Din; but he said, "O my lady Nafisah²! Now is thy time!" And behold, a scorpion stung the Badawi in the palm and he cried out, saying, "Help, O Arabs! I am stung"; and he alighted from his mare's back. So his comrades came up to him and mounted him again, asking, "What hath befallen thee?" whereto he answered, "A young scorpion³ stung me." So they departed with the caravan. Such was their case ; but as regards Ala al-Din, he tarried in the niche, and Mahmud of Balkh bade load his beasts and fared forwards till he came to the Lion's Copse, where he found Ala al-Din's attendants all lying slain. At this he rejoiced and went on till he reached the cistern and the reservoir. Now his mule was athirst and turned aside to drink, but she saw Ala al-Din's shadow in the water and shied and started ; whereupon Mahmud raised his eyes, and seeing Ala al-Din lying in the niche, stripped to his shirt and bag-trousers, said to him, "What man this deed to thee hath dight and left thee in this evil plight?" Answered Ala al-Din, "The Arabs"; and Mahmud said, "O my son, the mules and the baggage were thy ransom; so do thou comfort thyself with his saying who said:—

¹ These "Kirámât" or Saints' miracles, which Spiritualists will readily accept, are recorded in vast numbers. Most men have half a dozen to tell, each of his "Pir" or patron, including the Istidrâj, or prodigy of chastisement (Dabistan, iii. 274).

² Great-grand-daughter of the Imam Hasan, buried in Cairo and famed for "Kirámât." Her father, governor of Al-Madinah, was imprisoned by Al-Mansur and restored to power by Al-Mahdi. She was married to a son of the Imam Ja'afar al-Sâdik and lived a life of devotion in Cairo, dying in A.H. 218 = 824. The corpse of the Imâm al-Shâfi'i was carried to her house, now her mosque and mausoleum: it stood in the Darb al-Sabûa which formerly divided Old from New Cairo and is now one of the latter's suburbs. Lane (M. E. chapt. x.) gives her name, but little more. The mention of her shows that the writer of the tale or the copyist was a Cairene: Abd al-Kadir is world-known; not so the "Sitt."

³ Arab. "Faikh akrib" for Ukayrib, a vulgarism.

If thereby man can save his head from death, * His good is worth him but a slice of nail!

But now, O my son, come down and fear no hurt." Thereupon he descended from the cistern-niche and Mahmud mounted him on a mule, and they fared on till they reached Baghdad, where he brought him to his own house and carried him to the bath, saying to him, "The goods and money were the ransom of thy life, O my son; but, if thou wilt hearken to me, I will give thee the worth of that thou hast lost, twice told." When he came out of the bath, Mahmud carried him into a saloon decorated with gold with four raised floors, and bade them bring a tray with all manner of meats. So they ate and drank and Mahmud bent towards Ala al-Din to snatch a kiss from him; but he received it upon the palm of his hand and said, "What, dost thou persist in thy evil designs upon me? Did I not tell thee that, were I wont to sell this merchandise to other than thee for gold, I would sell it thee for silver?" Quoth Mahmud, "I will give thee neither merchandise nor mule nor clothes save at this price; for I am gone mad for love of thee." Ala al-Din replied, "Of a truth this may never be, take back thy dress and thy mule and open the door that I may go out." So he opened the door, and Ala al-Din fared forth and walked on, with the dogs barking at his heels, and he went forwards through the dark when behold, he saw the door of a mosque standing open and, entering the vestibule, there took shelter and concealment; and suddenly a light approached him, and on examining it he saw that it came from a pair of lanthorns borne by two slaves before two merchants. Now one was an old man of comely face and the other a youth ; and he heard the younger say to the elder, "O my uncle, I conjure thee by Allah, give me back my cousin ! " The old man replied, " Did I not forbid thee, many a time, when the oath of divorce was always in thy mouth, as it were Holy Writ ? " Then he turned to his right and seeing Ala al-Din as he was a slice of the full moon, said to him, " Peace be with thee ! who art thou, O my son ? " Quoth he, returning the salutation of peace, " I am Ala al-Din, son of Shams al-Din, Consul of the merchants for Egypt. I besought my father for merchandise ; so he packed me fifty loads of stuffs and goods. "—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din continued, " So he packed me fifty loads of goods and gave me ten thousand dinars, wherewith I set out for Baghdad ; but when I reached the Lion's Copse, the wild Arabs came out against me and took all my goods and moneys. So I entered the city knowing not where to pass the night and, seeing this place, I took shelter here. " Quoth the old man, " O my son, what sayest thou to my giving thee a thousand dinars and a suit of clothes and a mule worth other two thousand ? " Ala al-Din asked, " To what end wilt thou give me these things, O my uncle ? " and the other answered, " This young man who accompanieth me is the son of my brother and an only son ; and I have a daughter called Zubaydah¹ the lutist, an only child who is a model of beauty and loveliness, so I married her to him. Now he loveth her, but she loatheth him ; and when he chanced to take an oath of triple divorcement and broke it, forthright she left him. Whereupon he egged on all the folk to intercede with me to restore her to him ; but I told him that this could not lawfully be save by an intermediate marriage, and we have agreed to make some stranger the intermediary² in order that none may taunt and shame him with this

¹ A popular name, dim. of Zubdah, cream, fresh butter, " creamkin. "

² Arab. " Mustahall, " " Mustahill " and vulg. " Muhallil " (= one who renders lawful). It means a man hired for the purpose who marries pro forma, and after wedding, and bedding with actual consummation, at once divorces the woman. He is held the reverse of respectable and no wonder. Hence, probably, Mandeville's story of the Islanders who, on the marriage night, " make another man to lie by their wives, to have their maidenhead, for which they give great hire and much thanks. And there are certain men in every town that serve for no other thing ; and they call them cadeberiz, that is to say, the fools of despair, because they believe their occuaffair. So, as thou art a foreigner, come with us and we will marry thee to her ; thou shalt lie with her to-night and on the morrow divorce her and we will give thee what I said." Quoth Ala al-Din to himself, " By Allah ! to bide the night with a bride on a bed in a house is far better than sleeping in the streets and vestibules ! " So he went with them to the Kazi whose heart, as soon as he saw Ala al-Din, was moved to love him, and who said to the old man, " What is your will ? " He replied, " We wish to make this young man an intermediary husband for my daughter ; but we will write a bond against him binding him to pay down by way of marriage-settlement ten thousand gold pieces. Now if after passing the night with her he divorce her in the morning, we will give him a mule and dress each worth a thousand dinars, and a third thousand of ready money ; but if he divorce her not, he shall pay down the ten thousand dinars according to contract." So they agreed to the agreement and the father of the bride-to-be received his bond for the marriage-settlement. Then he took Ala al-Din and clothing him anew, carried him to his daughter's house and there he left him standing at the door, whilst he himself went in to the young lady and said, " Take the bond of thy marriage-settlement, for I have wedded thee to a handsome youth, by name Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat : so do thou use him with the best of usage." Then he put the bond into her hands and left her and went to his own lodging. Now the lady's cousin had an old duenna who used to visit Zubaydah, and he had done many a kindness to this woman, so he said to her, " O my mother, if my cousin Zubaydah see this handsome young man, she will never after accept my offer ; so I would fain have thee contrive some trick to keep her and him apart." She answered, " By the life of thy youth,¹ I will not suffer him approach her ! " Then she went to Ala al-Din and said to him, " O my son, I have a word of advice to give thee, for the love of Almighty Allah and do thou accept my counsel, as I fear for thee from this young woman : better thou let her lie alone and feel not her person nor draw thee near to her." He asked, " Why so ? " and she answered, " Because her body is full of leprosy, and I dread lest she infect thy fair and seemly youth." Quoth he, " I have no need of her." Thereupon she went to the lady and said the like to her of Ala al-Din ; and she pation is a dangerous one." Burckhardt gives the proverb (No. 79), " A thousand lovers rather than one Mustahall," the latter being generally some ugly fellow picked up in the streets, and disgusting to the wife who must permit his embraces.

¹ This is a woman's oath, not used by men.

replied, "I have no need of him, but will let him lie alone, and on the morrow he shall gang his gait." Then she called a slave-girl and said to her, "Take the tray of food and set it before him that he may sup." So the handmaid carried him the tray of food and set it before him and he ate his fill; after which he sat down and raised his charming voice and fell to reciting the chapter called *Y. S.*¹ The lady listened to him and found his voice as melodious as the psalms of David sung by David himself,² which when she heard, she exclaimed, "Allah disappoint the old hag who told me that he was affected with leprosy! Surely this is not the voice of one who hath such a disease; and all was a lie against him."³ Then she took a lute of India-land workmanship and tuning the strings, sang to it in a voice so sweet its music would stay the birds in the heart of heaven, and began these two couplets:—

I love a fawn with gentle white-black eyes, * Whose walk the willow-wand with envy kills:
Forbidding me he bids for rival mine, * 'Tis Allah's grace who grants to whom He wills!

And when he heard her chant these lines he ended his recitation of the chapter, and began also to sing and repeated the following couplet:—

My salám to the Fawn in the garments concealed, * And to roses in gardens of cheek revealed.

The lady rose up when she heard this, and her inclination for him redoubled and she lifted the curtain; and Ala al-Din, seeing her, recited these two couplets:—

She shineth forth, a moon, and bends a willow-wand, * And breathes out ambergris, and gazes, a gazelle.
Mescems as if grief loved my heart, and when from her * Estrangement
I abide possession to it fell.⁴

Thereupon she came forward, swinging her haunches and gracefully swaying a shape the handiwork of Him whose boons are hidden; and each of them stole one glance of the eyes that cost them a thousand sighs. And when the shafts of the two regards

1 Pronounced "Yá Sin" (chapt. xxxvi.) the "heart of the Koran," much used for edifying recitation. Some pious Moslems in Egypt repeat it as a Wazifah, or religious task, or as masses for the dead, and all educated men know its 83 verses by rote.

2 Arab. "Al Dáúd" = the family of David, i.e. David himself, a popular idiom. The prophet's recitation of the "Mazámir" (Psalter) worked miracles.

3 There is a peculiar thickening of the voice in leprosy, which at once betrays the hideous disease.

4 These lines have occurred in vol. iii. night clxxxiii. I quote Mr. Payne (in loco) by way of variety.

which met rankled in his heart, he repeated these two couplets:—

She 'spied the moon of Heaven, reminding me * Of nights when met we in the meadows li'en :

True, both saw moons, but sooth to say, it was * Her very eyes I saw,
and she my eyne.

And when she drew near him, and there remained but two paces between them, he recited these two couplets:—

She spread three tresses of unplaited hair * One night, and showed me nights not one but four ;

And faced the moon of Heaven with her brow, * And showed me twofold moons in single hour.

And as she was hard by him he said to her, "Keep away from me lest thou infect me." Whereupon she uncovered her wrist¹ to him, and he saw that it was cleft, as it were in two halves, by its veins and sinews, and its whiteness was as the whiteness of virgin silver. Then said she, "Keep away from me, thou! for thou art stricken with leprosy, and may be thou wilt infect me." He asked, "Who told thee I was a leper?" and she answered, "The old woman so told me." Quoth he, "'Twas she told me also that thou wast afflicted with white scurvy"; and so saying, he bared his forearms and showed her that his skin was also like virgin silver. Thereupon she pressed him to her bosom and he pressed her to his bosom, and the twain embraced with closest embrace; then she took him and they lay together for the night. And when morning dawned he cried to her, "Alas for delight which is not fulfilled! The raven² taketh it and fieth away!" She asked, "What meaneth this saying?" and he answered, "O my lady, I have but this

1 Where the "Juzám" (leprosy, elephantiasis, morbus sacrum, etc., etc.) is supposed first to show: the swelling would alter the shape. Lane (ii. 267) translates "her wrist which was bipartite."

2 Arab. "Ghuráb al-Bayn" = raven of the waste or the parting; hence the bird of Odin symbolises separation (which is also called Al-bayn). The Raven (Ghurab = Heb. Oreb and Lat. Corvus, one of the prehistoric words) is supposed to be seen abroad earlier than any other bird; and it is entitled "Abu Zájir," father of omens, because lucky when flying towards the right and v.v. It is opposed in poetry to the (white) pigeon, the emblem of union, peace and happiness. The vulgar declare that when Mohammed hid in the cave the crow kept calling to his pursuers, "Ghár! Ghár!" (cavern, cavern): hence the Prophet condemned him to wear eternal mourning and ever to repeat the traitorous words. This is the old tale of Coronis and Apollo (Ovid, lib. ij.).

— who blacked the raven o'er
And bid him prate in his white plumes no more.

hour to abide with thee." Quoth she, "Who saith so?" and quoth he, "Thy father made me give him a written bond to pay ten thousand dinars to thy wedding-settlement; and except I pay it this very day, they will imprison me for debt in the Kazi's house; and now my hand lacketh one half-dirham of the sum." She asked, "O my lord, is the marriage-bond in thy hand or in theirs?" and he answered, "O my lady, in mine, but I have nothing." She rejoined, "The matter is easy; fear thou nothing. Take these hundred dinars: an I had more, I would give thee what thou lackest; but of a truth my father, of his love for my cousin, hath transported all his goods, even to my jewellery, from my lodging to his. But when they send thee a serjeant of the Ecclesiastical Court,"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the young lady rejoined to Ala al-Din, "And when they send thee at an early hour a serjeant of the Ecclesiastical Court, and the Kazi and my father bid thee divorce me, do thou reply, By what law is it lawful and right that I should marry at nightfall and divorce in the morning? Then kiss the Kazi's hand and give him a present, and in like manner kiss the Assessor's hands and give each of them ten gold pieces. So they will all speak with thee, and if they ask thee, Why dost thou not divorce her and take the thousand dinars and the mule and suit of clothes, according to contract duly contracted? do thou answer, Every hair of her head is worth a thousand ducats to me and I will never put her away, neither will I take a suit of clothes nor aught else. And if the Kazi say to thee, Then pay down the marriage settlement, do thou reply, I am short of cash at this present; whereupon he and the Assessors will deal in friendly fashion with thee and allow thee time to pay." Now whilst they were talking, behold the Kazi's officer knocked at the door; so Ala al-Din went down, and the man said to him, "Come, speak the Efendi,¹ for thy father-in-law summoneth thee." So Ala al-Din gave him five dinars and said to him, "O Summoner, by what law am I bound to marry at nightfall and divorce next morning?" The serjeant answered, "By no law of ours at all, at all; and if thou be ignorant of the religious law, I will act as thine advocate." Then they went to the divorce-court and the Kazi said to Ala al-Din, "Why dost thou not put away the woman and take what falleth to thee by the contract?" Hearing this he went up to the Kazi; and kissing his hand put fifty dinars into it and said, "O our lord the Kazi, by what law is it lawful and right that I should marry at nightfall and divorce in the morning in my own despite?" The Kazi answered, "Divorce on compulsion and by force is sanctioned by no school of the Moslems." Then said the young lady's father, "If thou wilt not divorce, pay me the ten thousand dinars, her marriage-settlement." Quoth Ala al-Din, "Give me a delay of three days"; but the Kazi said, "Three days is not time enough; he shall give thee ten." So they agreed to this and bound him after ten days either to pay the dowry or to divorce her. And after consenting he left them and taking meat and rice and clarified butter¹ and what else of food he needed, returned to the house and told the young woman all that had passed; whereupon she said, "'Twixt night and day, wondrous may display; and Allah bless him for his say:—

¹ This use of a Turkish title, "Efendi" being=our esquire, and inferior to a Bey, is a rank anachronism, probably of the copyist.

Be mild when rage shall come to afflict thy soul; * Be patient when calamity breeds ire;

Lookye, the Nights are big with child by Time, * Whose pregnancy bears wondrous things and dire."

Then she rose and made ready food and brought the tray, and they two ate and drank and were merry and mirthful. Presently, Ala al-Din besought her to let him hear a little music; so she took the lute and played a melody that had made the hardest stone dance for glee, and the strings cried out in present ecstasy, "O Loving One²!" after which she passed from the adagio into the presto and a livelier measure. As they thus spent their leisure in joy and jollity and mirth and merriment, behold! there came a knocking at the door and she said to him, "Go see who is at the door." So he went down and opened it and finding four Darwayshes standing without, said to them, "What want ye?" They replied, "O my lord, we are foreign and wandering religious mendicants, the viands of whose souls are music and dainty verse, and we would fain take our pleasure with thee this night till morning doth appear, when we will wend our way, and with Almighty Allah be thy reward; for we adore music and there is not one of us but

¹ Arab. "Samn" = Hind. "Ghi"; butter melted, skimmed, and allowed to cool.

² Arab. "Ya Wadūd"; a title of the Almighty: the Mac. Edit. has "O David!"

knoweth by heart store of odes and songs and ritornellos.¹" He answered, "There is one I must consult"; and he returned and told Zubaydah, who said, "Open the door to them." So he brought them up and made them sit down and welcomed them; then he fetched them food, but they would not eat, and said, "O our lord, our meat is to repeat Allah's name in our hearts and to hear music with our ears, and bless him who saith:—

Our aim is only converse to enjoy, * And eating joyeth only cattle-kind.²

And just now we heard pleasant music in thy house, but when we entered it ceased; and fain would we know whether the player was a slave-girl, white or black, or a maiden of good family." He answered, "It was this my wife," and told them all that had befallen him, adding, "Verily my father-in-law hath bound me to pay a marriage-settlement of ten thousand dinars for her, and they have given me ten days' time." Said one of the Darwayshes, "Have no care and think of naught but good; for I am Shaykh of the Convent and have forty Darwayshes under my orders. I will presently collect from them the ten thousand dinars and thou shalt pay thy father-in-law the wedding-settlement. But now bid thy wife make us music that we may be gladdened and pleased; for to some folk music is meat, to others medicine, and to others refreshing as a fan." Now these four Darwayshes were none other than the Caliph Harun al-Rashid, his Wazir Ja'afar the Barmecide, Abu al-Nowás al-Hasan son of Háni³ and Masrur the sworder; and the reason of their coming to the house was that the Caliph, being heavy at heart, had summoned his minister and said, "O Wazir! it is our will to go down to the city and pace its streets, for my breast is sore straitened." So they all four donned darwaysh-

1 Arab. "Muwashshahah"; a complicated stanza, of which specimens have occurred. Mr. Payne calls it a "ballad," which would be a "Kunyat al-Zidd."

2 Arab. "Baháim" (plur. of Bahímah = Heb. Behemoth), applied in Egypt especially to cattle. A friend of the "Oppenheim" house, a name the Arabs cannot pronounce, was known throughout Cairo as "Jack al-baháim" (of the cows).

3 Lit. "The father of side-locks," a nickname of one of the Tobba Kings. This "Hasan of the ringlets," who wore two long pig-tails hanging to his shoulders, was the Rochester or Piron of his age: his name is still famous for brilliant wit, extempore verse, and the wildest debauchery. D'Herbelot's sketch of his life is very meagre. His poetry has survived to the present day, and (unhappily) we shall hear more of Abu Nowás. On the subject of these patronymics Lane (Mod. Egypt, chap. iv.) has a strange remark that "Abu Dáúd is not the Father of Dáúd or Abu Ali the Father of Ali, but whose Father is (or was) Dáúd or Ali." Here, however, he simply confounds Abu = father of (followed by a genitive), with Abu-h (for Aub-hu) = he, whose father.

dress and went down and walked about, till they came to that house where, hearing music, they were minded to know the cause. They spent the night in joyance and harmony and telling tale after tale until morning dawned, when the Caliph laid an hundred gold pieces under the prayer-carpet, and all taking leave of Ala al-Din went their way. Now when Zubaydah lifted the carpet she found beneath it the hundred dinars and she said to her husband, "Take these hundred dinars which I have found under the prayer-carpet; assuredly the Darwayshes when about to leave us laid them there without our knowledge." So Ala al-Din took the money, and repairing to the market bought therewith meat and rice and clarified butter and all they required. And when it was night, he lit the wax-candles and said to his wife, "The mendicants, it is true, have not brought the ten thousand dinars which they promised me; but indeed they are poor men." As they were talking, behold, the Darwayshes knocked at the door and she said, "Go down and open to them." So he did her bidding and bringing them up, said to them, "Have you brought me the ten thousand dinars you promised me?" They answered, "We have not been able to collect aught thereof as yet; but fear nothing: Inshallah, to-morrow we will compound for thee some alchemical cookery. But now bid thy wife play us her very best pieces and gladden our hearts, for we love music." So she took her lute and made them such melody that had caused the hardest rocks to dance with glee; and they passed the night in mirth and merriment, converse and good cheer, till morn appeared with its sheen and shone, when the Caliph laid an hundred gold pieces under the prayer-carpet and all, after taking leave of Ala al-Din, went their way. And they ceased not to visit him thus every night for nine nights; and each morning the Caliph put an hundred dinars under the prayer carpet, till the tenth night, when they came not. Now the reason of their failure to come was that the Caliph had sent to a great merchant, saying to him, "Bring me fifty loads of stuffs, such as come from Cairo,"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Prince of True Believers said to that merchant, "Bring me fifty loads of stuffs such as come from Cairo, and let each one be worth a thousand dinars, and write on each bale its price: and bring me also a male Abyssinian slave." The merchant did the bidding of the Caliph, who committed to the slave a basin and ewer of gold and other presents, together with the fifty loads; and wrote a letter to Ala al-Din as from his father Shams al-Din and said to him, "Take these bales and what else is with them, and go to such and such a quarter wherein dwelleth the Provost of the merchants, and say:—Where be Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat? till folk direct thee to his quarter and his house." So the slave took the letter and the goods and what else and fared forth on his errand. Such was his case; but as regards Zubaydah's cousin and first husband, he went to her father and said to him, "Come, let us go to Ala al-Din and make him divorce the daughter of my uncle." So they set out both together and, when they came to the street in which the house stood, they found fifty he-mules laden with bales of stuffs, and a blackamoor riding on a she-mule. So they said to him, "Whose loads are these?" He replied, "They belong to my lord Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat; for his father equipped him with merchandise and sent him on a journey to Baghdad-city; but the wild Arabs came forth against him and took his money and goods and all he had. So when the ill news reached his father, he despatched me to him with these loads, in lieu of those he had lost; besides a mule laden with fifty thousand dinars, a parcel of clothes worth a power of money, a robe of sables,¹ and a basin and ewer of gold." Whereupon the lady's father said, "He whom thou seekest is my son-in-law and I will show thee his house." Meanwhile Ala al-Din was sitting at home in huge concern, when lo! one knocked at the door and he said, "O Zubaydah, Allah is all-knowing! but I fear thy father hath sent me an officer from the Kazi or the Chief of Police." Quoth she, "Go down and see what it is." So he went down; and opening the door found his father-in-law, the Provost of the merchants with an Abyssinian slave, dusky-complexioned and pleasant of favour, riding on a mule. When the slave saw him he dismounted, and kissed his hands; and Ala al-Din said, "What dost thou want?" He replied, "I am the slave of my lord Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, son of Shams al-Din, Consul of the merchants for the land of Egypt, who hath sent me to him with this charge." Then he gave him the letter, and Ala al-Din opening it found written what followeth:—²

¹ Arab. "Samûr," applied in slang language to cats and dogs, hence the witty Egyptians converted Admiral Seymour (Lord Alcester) into "Samûr."

² The home-student of Arabic may take this letter as a model even in the present day; somewhat stiff and old-fashioned, but gentlemanly and courteous

Ho thou my letter! when my friend shall see thee, * Kiss thou the ground and buss his sandal-shoon:
 Look thou lie softly and thou hasten not; * My life and rest are in those hands so boon.

"After hearty salutations and congratulations and high estimation from Shams al-Din to his son Abu al-Shamat. Know, O my son, that news hath reached me of the slaughter of thy men and the plunder of thy moneys and goods; so I send thee herewith fifty loads of Egyptian stuffs, together with a suit of clothes and a robe of sables and a basin and ewer of gold. Fear thou no evil and the goods thou hast lost were the ransom of thy life; so regret them not and may no further grief befall thee. Thy mother and the people of the house are doing well in health and happiness and all greet thee with abundant greetings. Moreover, O my son, it hath reached me that they have married thee, by way of intermediary, to the Lady Zubaydah the Lutist, and they have imposed on thee a marriage-settlement of ten thousand dinars; wherefore I send thee also fifty thousand dinars by the slave Salim.¹" Now when Ala al-Din had made an end of reading the letter, he took possession of the loads and, turning to the Provost, said to him, "O my father-in-law, take the ten thousand dinars, the marriage-settlement of thy daughter Zubaydah, and take also the loads of goods and dispose of them, and thine be the profit; only return me the cost-price." He answered, "Nay, by Allah! I will take nothing; and as for thy wife's settlement do thou settle the matter with her." Then, after the goods had been brought in, they went to Zubaydah and she said to her sire, "O my father, whose loads be these?" He said, "These belong to thy husband Ala al-Din: his father hath sent them to him instead of those whereof the wild Arabs spoiled him. Moreover, he hath sent him fifty thousand dinars with a parcel of clothes, a robe of sables, a she-mule for riding, and a basin and ewer of gold. As for the marriage-settlement, that is for thy recking." Thereupon Ala al-Din rose and opening the money-box gave her her settlement and the lady's cousin said, "O my uncle, let him divorce to me my wife"; but the old man replied, "This may never be now; for the marriage-tie is in his hand." Thereupon the young man went out, sore afflicted and sadly vexed and, returning home, fell sick, for his heart had received its death-blow; so he presently died. But as for Ala al-Din, after receiving his goods he went to the bazar, and buying what meats and drinks he needed made a banquet as usual against the night, saying to Zubaydah, "See these lying Darwayshes; they promised us and broke their promises." Quoth she, "Thou art the son of a Consul of the merchants, yet was thy hand short of half a dirham; how then should it be with poor Darwayshes?" Quoth he, "Almighty Allah hath enabled us to do without them; but if they come to us, never again will I open the door to them." She asked, "Why so, whenas their coming footsteps brought us good luck; and, moreover, they put an hundred dinars under the prayer-carpet for us every night? Perforce must thou open the door to them an they come." So when day departed with its light and in gloom came night, they lighted the wax-candles and he said to her, "Rise, Zubaydah, make us music"; and behold! at this moment some one knocked at the door, and she said, "Go and look who is at the door." So he went down and opened it and seeing the Darwayshes, said, "Oh, fair welcome to the liars! Come up." Accordingly they went up with him and he seated them and brought them the tray of food; and they ate and drank, and became merry and mirthful, and presently said to him, "O my lord, our hearts have been troubled for thee; what hath passed between thee and thy father-in-law?" He answered, "Allah compensated us beyond and above our desire." Rejoined they, "By Allah! we were in fear for thee"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Sal'm" (not Sé-lim) meaning the "Safe and sound"

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Fifty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Darwayshes thus addressed Ala al-Din, "By Allah! we were in fear for thee and naught kept us from thee but our lack of cash and coin." Quoth he, "Speedy relief hath come to me from my Lord; for my father hath sent me fifty thousand dinars and fifty loads of stuffs, each load worth a thousand dinars; besides a riding-mule, a robe of sables, an Abyssinian slave, and a basin and ewer of gold. Moreover, I have made my peace with my father-in-law, and my wife hath become my lawful wife by my paying her settlement; so laud to Allah for that!" Presently the Caliph rose to do a necessity; whereupon Ja'afar bent him towards Ala al-Din and said, "Look to thy manners, for thou art in the presence of the Commander of the Faithful." Asked he, "How have I failed in good breeding before the Commander of the Faithful, and which of you is he?" Quoth Ja'afar, "He who went out but now to make water is the Commander of the Faithful, Harun al-Rashid, and I am the Wazir Ja'afar; and this is Masrur, the executioner, and this other is Abu Nowas Hasan bin Hani. And now, O Ala al-Din, use thy reason and bethink thee how many days' journey it is between Cairo and Baghdad." He replied, "Five-and-forty days' journey"; and Ja'afar rejoined, "Thy baggage was stolen only ten days ago; so how could the news have reached thy father, and how could he pack thee up other goods and send them to thee five-and-forty days' journey in ten days' time?" Quoth Ala al-Din, "O my lord, and whence then came they?" "From the Commander of the Faithful," replied Ja'afar, "of his great affection for thee." As they were speaking, lo! the Caliph entered and Ala al-Din rising, kissed ground before him and said, "Allah keep thee, O Prince of the Faithful, and give thee long life; and may the lieges never lack thy bounty and beneficence!" Replied the Caliph, "O Ala al-Din, let Zubaydah play us an air by way of house-warming¹ for thy deliverance." Thereupon she played him on the lute so rare a melody that the very stones shook for glee, and the strings cried out for present ecstasy, "O Loving One!" They spent the night after the merriest fashion, and in the morning the Caliph said to Ala al-Din, "Come to the Diwan to-morrow." He answered, "Hearkening and obedience, O Commander of the Faithful, so Allah will and thou be well and in good case!" On the morrow he took ten trays and putting on each a costly present, went up with them to the palace; and the Caliph was sitting on the throne when, behold! Ala al-Din appeared at the door of the Diwan, repeating these two couplets:—

Honour and Glory wait on thee each morn! • Thine enviers' noses in the dust be set!

Ne'er cease thy days to be as white as snow; • Thy foeman's days to be as black as jet!

"Welcome, O Ala al-Din!" said the Caliph, and he replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, the Prophet (whom Allah save and safeguard²) was wont to accept presents; and these ten trays, with what is on them, are my offering to thee." The Caliph

1 Arab. "Haláwáh" = sweetmeat; meaning an entertainment such as men give to their friends after sickness or a journey: it is technically called as above, "The Sweetmeat of Safety."

2 Arab. "Salát" which from Allah means mercy; from the Angels intercession and pardon; and from mankind blessing. Concerning the specific effects of blessing the Prophet, see Pilgrimage (ii. 70). The formula is often slurred over when a man is in a hurry to speak: an interrupting friend will say "Bless the Prophet!" and he does so by ejaculating "Sa'am," accepted his gift and, ordering him a robe of honour, made him Provost of the merchants and gave him a seat in the Diwan. And as he was sitting behold, his father-in-law came in and seeing Ala al-Din seated in his place and clad in a robe of honour, said to the Caliph, "O King of the Age, why is this man sitting in my place and wearing this robe of honour?" Quoth the Caliph "I have made him Provost of the merchants, for offices are by investiture and not in perpetuity, and thou art deposed." Answered the merchant, "Thou hast done well, O Commander of the Faithful, for he is ours and one of us. Allah make the best of us the managers of our affairs! How many a little one hath become great!" Then the Caliph wrote Ala al-Din a Firman¹ of investiture and gave it to the Governor, who gave it to the crier,² and the crier made proclamation in the Diwan, saying, "None is Provost of the merchants but Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, and his word is to be heard, and he must be obeyed with due respect paid, and he meriteth homage and honour and high degree!" Moreover, when the Diwan broke up, the Governor went down with the crier before Ala al-Din, and the crier repeated the proclamation and they carried Ala al-Din through the thoroughfares of Baghdad, making proclamation of his dignity. Next day Ala al-Din opened a shop for his slave Salim, and set him therein to buy and sell, whilst he himself rode to the palace and took his place in the Caliph's Diwan. — And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixtieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din rode to the palace and took his place in the Caliph's Diwan. Now it came to pass one day, when he sat in his stead as was his wont, behold, one said to the Caliph, "O Commander of the Faithful, may thy head survive Such an one the cup-companion! for he is gone to the mercy of Almighty Allah, but be thy life prolonged!" Quoth the Caliph, "Where is Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat?" So he went up to the Commander of the ¹ Persian meaning originally a command: it is now applied to a Wazirial order as opposed to the "Irâdah," the Sultan's order.

² Arab. "Mashâ'ilî". lit. the cresset-bearer who has before appeared as hangman

³ Another polite formula for announcing a death.

Faithful, who at once clad him in a splendid dress of honour and made him his boon-companion; appointing him a monthly pay and allowance of a thousand dinars. He continued to keep him company till, one day, as he sat in the Diwan, according to his custom attending upon the Caliph, lo and behold! an Emir came up with sword and shield in hand and said, "O Commander of the Faithful, may thy head long outlive the Head of the Sixty, for he is dead this day"; whereupon the Caliph ordered Ala al-Din a dress of honour and made him Chief of the Sixty, in place of the other who had neither wife nor son nor daughter. So Ala al-Din laid hands on his estate and the Caliph said to him, "Bury him in the earth and take all he hath left of wealth and slaves and handmaids.¹" Then he shook the handkerchief² and dismissed the Diwan, whereupon Ala al-Din went forth, attended by Ahmad al-Danaf, captain of the right, and Hasan Shúmán, captain of the left, riding at his either stirrup, each with his forty men.³ Presently he turned to Hasan Shuman and his men and said to them, "Plead ye for me with the Captain Ahmad al-Danaf that he please to accept me as his son by covenant before Allah." And Ahmad assented, saying, "I and my forty men will go before thee to the Diwan every morning." Now after this Ala al-Din continued in the Caliph's service many days; till one day it chanced that he left the Diwan and, returning home, dismissed Ahmad al-Danaf and his men, and sat down with his wife Zubaydah, the lute-player, who lighted the wax candles and went out of the room upon an occasion. Suddenly he heard a loud shriek; so he rose up and, running in haste to see what was the matter, found that it was his wife who had cried out. She was lying at full length on the ground and when he put his hand to her breast, he found her dead. Now her father's house faced that of Ala al-Din, and he, hearing the shriek, came in and said, "What is the matter, O my Lord Ala al-Din?" He replied, "O my father, may thy head outlive thy daughter Zubaydah! But, O my father, honour to the dead is burying them." So when the morning dawned they buried her in the earth, and her husband and father condoled with and mutually consoled each other. Thus far concerning her; but as regards

1 As he died heirless the property lapsed to the Treasury.

2 This shaking the kerchief is a signal to disperse, and the action suggests its meaning. Thus it is used in an opposite sense to "throwing the kerchief," a pseudo-Oriental practice whose significance is generally understood in Europe.

3 The body-guard being of two divisions.

Ala al-Din, he donned mourning dress and declined the Diwan, abiding tearful-eyed and heavy-hearted at home. After a while the Caliph said to Ja'afar, "O Wazir, what is the cause of Ala al-Din's absence from the Diwan?" The Minister answered, "O Commander of the Faithful, he is in mourning for his wife Zubaydah; and is occupied in receiving those who come to console him"; and the Caliph said, "It behoveth us to pay him a visit of condolence." "I hear and I obey," replied Ja'afar. So they took horse, the Caliph and the Minister and a few attendants, and rode to Ala al-Din's house and as he was sitting at home, behold, the party came in upon him; whereupon he rose to receive them and kissed ground before the Caliph, who said to him, "Allah make good thy loss to thee!" Answered Ala al-Din, "May Allah preserve thee to us, O Commander of the Faithful!" Then said the Caliph, "O Ala al-Din, why hast thou absented thyself from the Diwan?" And he replied, "Because of my mourning for my wife Zubaydah, O Commander of the Faithful." The Caliph rejoined, "Put away grief from thee: verily she is dead and gone to the mercy of Almighty Allah, and mourning will avail thee nothing; no, nothing." But Ala al-Din said, "O Commander of the Faithful, I shall never leave mourning for her till I die and they bury me by her side." Quoth the Caliph, "In Allah is compensation for every decease, and neither device nor riches can deliver from death; and divinely gifted was he who said:—

All sons of woman, albe long preserved, * Are borne upon the bulging bier some day.¹

How then shall 'joy man joy or taste delight, * Upon whose cheeks shall rest the dust and clay?"

When the Caliph had made an end of condoling with him, he charged him not to absent himself from the Diwan, and returned to his palace. And Ala al-Din, after a last sorrowful night, mounted early in the morning and riding to the court, kissed ground before the Commander of the Faithful, who made a move-

1 Arab. "Hadbá," lit. "hump-backed"; alluding to the Badawi bier; a pole to which the corpse is slung (Lane). It seems to denote the protuberance of the corpse when placed upon the bier which before was flat. The quotation is from Ka'ab's Mantle-Poem (Burdah, v. 37), "Every son of a female, long though his safety may be, is a day borne upon a ridged implement," says Mr. Redhouse, explaining the latter as a "bier with a ridged lid." Here we differ: the Janázah with a lid is not a Badawi article: the wildlings use the simplest stretcher; and I would translate the lines;—

The son of woman, whatso his career,
One day is borne upon the gibbous bier.

ment as if rising from the throne¹ to greet and welcome him; and bade him take his appointed place in the Diwan, saying, "O Ala al-Din, thou art my guest to-night." So presently he carried him into his serraglio, and calling a slave-girl named Kút al-Kulúb, said to her, "Ala al-Din had a wife called Zubaydah, who used to sing to him and solace him of cark and care; but she is gone to the mercy of Almighty Allah, and now I would have thee play him an air upon the lute,"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph said to the damsel Kut al-Kulub, 'I would have thee play him upon the lute an air of fashion sweet and rare that he may be solaced of his cark and care.' So she rose and made sweet music; and the Caliph said to Ala al-Din, "What sayest thou of this damsel's voice?" He replied, "Verily, O Commander of the Faithful, Zubaydah's voice was the finer; but she is skilled in touching the lute cunningly, and her playing would make a rock dance with glee." The Caliph asked, "Doth she please thee?" and he answered, "She doth, O Commander of the Faithful"; whereupon the King said, "By the life of my head and the tombs of my forefathers, she is a gift from me to thee, she and her waiting-women!" Ala al-Din fancied that the Caliph was jesting with him; but, on the morrow, the King went in to Kut al-Kulub and said to her, "I have given thee to Ala al-Din"; whereat she rejoiced, for she had seen him and loved him. Then the Caliph returned from his serraglio-palace to the Diwan; and, calling porters, said to them, "Set all the goods of Kut al-Kulub and her waiting-women in a litter, and carry them to Ala al-Din's home." So they conducted her to the house and showed her into the pavilion, whilst the Caliph sat in the hall of audience till the close of day, when the Diwan broke up and he retired to his Harim. Such was his case; but as regards Kut al-Kulub, when she had taken up her lodging in Ala al-Din's mansion, she and her women, forty in all, besides the eunuchry, she called two of these caponised slaves and said to them, "Sit ye on stools, one on the right and another on the left hand of the door; and, when Ala al-Din cometh home, both of you kiss his hands and say to him,—Our mistress Kut al-Kulub requesteth thy presence in the pavilion, for the Caliph hath given her to thee, her and her women." They answered, "We hear and obey"; and did as she bade them. So, when Ala al-Din returned, he found two of the Caliph's eunuchs sitting at the door and was amazed at the matter and said to himself, "Surely, this is not my own house; or else what can have happened?" Now, when the eunuchs saw him, they rose to him and kissing his hands, said to him, "We are of the Caliph's household and slaves to Kut al-Kulub, who saluteth thee, giving thee to know that the Caliph hath bestowed her on thee, her, and her women, and requesteth thy presence." Quoth Ala al-Din, "Say ye to her:—Thou art welcome; but so long as thou shalt abide with me, I will not enter the pavilion wherein thou art, for what was the master's should not become the man's; and furthermore ask her:—What was the sum of thy day's expenditure in the Caliph's palace?" So they went in and did his errand to her, and she answered, "An hundred dinars a day"; whereupon quoth he to himself, "There was no need for the Caliph to give me Kut al-Kulub, that I should be put to such expense for her; but there is no help for it." So she abode with him awhile and he assigned her daily an hundred dinars for her maintenance; till one day he absented himself from the Diwan and the Caliph said to Ja'afar, "O Wazir, I gave not Kut al-Kulub unto Ala al-Din but that she might console him for his wife; why, then, doth he still hold aloof from us?" Answered Ja'afar, "O Commander of the Faithful, he spake sooth who said:—Whoso findeth his fere, forgetteth his friends." Rejoined the Caliph, "Haply he hath not absented himself without excuse, but we will pay him a visit." Now some days before this Ala al-Din had said to Ja'afar, "I complained to the Caliph of my grief and mourning for the loss of my wife Zubaydah and he gave me Kut al-Kulub"; and the Minister replied, "Except he loved thee, he hath not given her to thee. Say, hast thou gone in unto her, O Ala al-Din?" He rejoined, "No, by Allah! I know not her length from her breadth." He asked, "And why?" and he answered, "O Wazir, what befitteth the lord befitteth not the liege." Then the Caliph and Ja'afar disguised themselves and went privily to visit Ala al-Din; but he knew them and rising to them kissed the hands of the Caliph, who looked at him and saw signs of sorrow in his face. So he said to him, "O Ala al-Din, whence cometh this sorrow wherein I see thee? Hast thou not gone in unto Kut al-Kulub?" He replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, what befitteth the lord befitteth not the thrall. No, as yet I have not gone in to visit her nor do I know her length from her breadth; so pray quit me of her." Quoth the Caliph, "I would fain see her and question her of her case"; and quoth Ala al-Din, "I hear and I obey, O Commander of the Faithful!" So the Caliph went in—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ This is a high honour to any courtier.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph went in to Kut al-Kulub, who rose to him on sighting him and kissed the ground between his hands; when he said to her, "Hath Ala al-Din gone in unto thee?" and she answered, "No, O Commander of the Faithful; I sent to bid him come, but he would not." So the Caliph bade carry her back to the Harim, and saying to Ala al-Din, "Do not absent thyself from us," returned to his palace. Accordingly, next morning, Ala al-Din mounted and rode to the Diwan, where he took his seat as Chief of the Sixty. Presently the Caliph ordered his treasurer to give the Wazir Ja'afar ten thousand dinars, and said, when his order was obeyed, "I charge thee to go down to the bazar where handmaidens are sold and buy Ala al-Din a slave-girl with this sum." So in obedience to the King, Ja'afar took Ala al-Din and went down with him to the bazar. Now, as chance would have it, that very day the Emir Khálid, whom the Caliph had made Governor of Baghdad, went down to the market to buy a slave-girl for his son, and the cause of his going was that his wife, Khátún by name, had borne him a son called Habzalam Bazázah,¹ and the same was foul of favour and had reached the age of twenty, without learning to mount horse; albeit his father was brave and bold, a doughty rider ready to plunge into the Sea of Darkness.² And it happened that on a certain night he had a dream, whereof he told his mother who rejoiced and said to his father, "I want to find him a wife, as he is now ripe for wedlock." Quoth Khalid, "The fellow is so foul of favour and withal so rank of odour, so sordid and beastly, that no woman would take him at a gift."

1 "Khatun" in Turk. means any lady: mistress, etc., and follows the name, e.g., Fátimah Khatun. Habzalam Bazazah is supposed to be a fanciful compound, uncouth as the named; the first word consisting of "Habb" seed, grain; and "Zalam" of Zulm = seed of tyranny. Can it be a travesty of "Absalom" (Ab Sa'ám, father of peace)? Lane (ii. 284) and Payne (iii. 280) prefer Habzalam and Hebezzlem.

2 Or night. A metaphor for rushing into peril.

And she answered, "We will buy him a slave-girl." So it befell, for the accomplishment of what Allah Almighty had decreed, that on the same day Ja'afar and Ala al-Din, and the Governor Khalid and his son, went down to the market and behold, they saw in the hands of a broker a beautiful girl, lovely-faced and of perfect shape; and the Wazir said to him, "O broker, ask her owner if he will take a thousand dinars for her." And as the broker passed by the Governor with the slave, Habzalam Bazazah cast at her one glance of the eyes which entailed for himself one thousand sighs; and he fell in love with her and passion got hold of him and he said, "O my father, buy me yonder slave-girl." So the Emir called the broker, who brought the girl to him, and he asked her her name. She replied, "My name is Jessamine"; and he said to Habzalam Bazazah, "O my son, an she please thee, do thou bid higher for her." Then he asked the broker, "What hath been bidden for her?" and he replied, "A thousand dinars." Said the Governor's son, "She is mine for a thousand pieces of gold and one more"; and the broker passed on to Ala al-Din, who bid two thousand dinars for her; and as often as the Emir's son bid another dinar, Ala al-Din bid a thousand. The ugly youth was vexed at this and said, "O broker! who is it that outbiddeth me for the slave-girl?" Answered the broker, "It is the Wazir Ja'afar, who is minded to buy her for Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." And Ala al-Din continued till he brought her price up to ten thousand dinars, and her owner was satisfied to sell her for that sum. Then he took the girl and said to her, "I give thee thy freedom for the love of Almighty Allah"; and forthwith wrote his contract of marriage with her and carried her to his house. Now when the broker returned, after having received his brokerage, the Emir's son summoned him and said to him, "Where is the girl?" Quoth he, "She was bought for ten thousand dinars by Ala al-Din, who hath set her free and married her." At this the young man was greatly vexed and cast down and sighing many a sigh, returned home, sick for love of the damsel; and he threw himself on his bed and refused food, for love and longing were sore upon him. Now when his mother saw him in this plight, she said to him, "Heaven safeguard thee, O my son! What aileth thee?" And he answered, "Buy me Jessamine, O my mother." Quoth she, "When the flower-seller passeth I will buy thee a basketful of jessamine." Quoth he, "It is not the jessamine one smells, but a slave-girl named Jessamine, whom my father would not buy for me." So she said to her husband, "Why and wherefore didst thou not buy him the girl?" and he replied, "What is fit for the lord is not fit for the liege, and I have no power to take her: no less a man bought her than Ala al-Din, Chief of the Sixty." Then the youth's weakness redoubled upon him, till he gave up sleeping and eating, and his mother bound her head with the fillets of mourning. And while in her sadness she sat at home, lamenting over her son behold, came in to her an old woman, known as the mother of Ahmad Kamákim¹ the arch-thief, a knave who would bore through a middle wall and scale the tallest of the tall and steal the very kohl off the eye-ball.² From his earliest years he had been given to these malpractices, till they made him Captain of the Watch, when he stole a sum of money; and the Chief of Police, coming upon him in the act, carried him to the Caliph, who bade put him to death on the common execution-ground.³ But he implored protection of the Wazir, whose intercession the Caliph never rejected; so he pleaded for him with the Commander of the Faithful who said, "How canst thou intercede for this pest of the human race?" Ja'afar answered, "O Commander of the Faithful, do thou imprison him; whoso built the first jail was a sage, seeing that a jail is the grave of the living and a joy for the foe." So the Caliph bade lay him in bilboes and write thereon, "Appointed to remain here until death, and not to be loosed but on the corpse-washer's bench"; and they cast him fettered into limbo. Now his mother was a frequent visitor to the house of the Emir Khalid, who was Governor and Chief of Police; and she used to go in to her son in jail and say to him, "Did I not warn thee to turn from thy wicked ways?" And he would always answer her, "Allah decreed this to me; but, O my mother, when thou visitest the Emir's wife make her intercede for me with her husband." So when the old woman came in to the Lady Khatun, she found her bound with the fillets of mourning and said to her, "Wherefore dost thou mourn?" She replied, "For my son Habzalam Bazazah"; and the old woman exclaimed, "Heaven safeguard thy son! what hath befallen him?" So the mother told her the whole story, and she said, "What wouldst thou say of him who should achieve such a feat as would save thy son?" Asked the lady, "And what feat wilt thou do?" Quoth the old woman, "I have a son called

¹ Plur. of kumkum, cucurbite, gourd-shaped vessel, jar.

* ² A popular exaggeration for a very expert thief.

³ Arab. "Buka'at al-dam": lit. the "low place of blood" (where it stagnates): so Al-Buká'ah = Cœlesyria.

⁴ That common and very unpleasant phrase, full of egoism and self-esteem, "I told you so," is even more common in the naive East than in the West. In this case the son's answer is far superior to the mother's question.

Ahmad Kamakim, the arch-thief, who lieth chained in jail and on his bilboes is written:—Appointed to remain till death; so do thou don thy richest clothes and trick thee out with thy finest jewels and present thyself to thy husband with an open face and smiling mien; and when he seeketh of thee what men seek of women, put him off and baulk him of his will and say:—By Allah, 'tis a strange thing! When a man desireth aught of his wife he dunneth her till she doeth it; but if a wife desire aught of her husband, he will not grant it to her. Then he will say:—What dost thou want? and do thou answer:—First swear to grant my request. If he swear to thee by his head or by Allah, say to him:—Swear to me the oath of divorce, and do not yield to him except he do this. And whenas he hath sworn to thee the oath of divorce, say to him:—Thou keepst in prison a man called Ahmad Kamakim, and he hath a poor old mother, who hath set upon me and who urgeth me in the matter, and who saith, Let thy husband intercede for him with the Caliph, that my son may repent and thou gain heavenly guerdon." And the Lady Khatun replied, "I hear and obey." So when her husband came in to her—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Governor came in to his wife, who spoke to him as she had been taught and made him swear the divorce-oath before she would yield to his wishes. He lay with her that night and when morning dawned, after he had made the Ghushl-ablution and prayed the dawn-prayer, he repaired to the prison and said, "O Ahmad Kamakim, O thou arch-thief, dost thou repent of thy works?" whereto he replied, "I do indeed repent and turn to Allah and say with heart and tongue:—I ask pardon of Allah." So the Governor took him out of jail and carried him to the Court (he being still in bilboes), and approaching the Caliph kissed ground before him. Quoth the King, "O Emir Khalid, what seekest thou?" whereupon he brought forward Ahmad Kamakim, shuffling and tripping in his fetters, and the Caliph said to him, "What! art thou yet alive, O Kamakim?" He replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, the miserable are long-lived." Quoth the Caliph to the Emir, "Why hast thou brought him hither?" and quoth he, "O Commander of the Faithful, he hath a poor old mother cut off from the world who hath none but this son, and she hath had recourse to thy slave, imploring him to intercede with thee to strike off his chains, for he repenteth of his evil courses ; and to make him Captain of the Watch as before." The Caliph asked Ahmad Kamakim, "Dost thou repent of thy sins?" "I do indeed repent me to Allah, O Commander of the Faithful," answered he ; whereupon the Caliph called for the blacksmith and made him strike off his irons on the corpse-washer's bench.¹ Moreover, he restored him to his former office and charged him to walk in the ways of godliness and righteousness. So he kissed the Caliph's hands and being invested with the uniform of Captain of the Watch, he went forth whilst they made proclamation of his appointment. Now for a long time he abode in the exercise of his office, till one day his mother went in to the Governor's wife, who said to her, "Praised be Allah who hath delivered thy son from prison and restored him to health and safety ! But why dost thou not bid him contrive some trick to get the girl Jessamine for my son Habzalam Bazazah ?" "That will I," answered she and going out from her, repaired to her son. She found him drunk with wine and said to him, "O my son, no one caused thy release from jail but the wife of the Governor, and she would have thee find some means to slay Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat and get his slave-girl Jessamine for her son Habzalam Bazazah." He answered, "That will be the easiest of things ; and I must needs set about it this very night." Now this was the first night of the new month, and it was the custom of the Caliph to spend that night with the Lady Zubaydah, for the setting free of a slave-girl or a Mameluke or something of the sort. Moreover, on such occasions he used to doff his royal habit, together with his rosary and dagger-sword and royal signet, and set them all upon a chair in the sitting-saloon : and he had also a golden lanthorn, adorned with three jewels strung on a wire of gold, by which he set great store ; and he would commit all these things to the charge of the eunuchry, whilst he went into the Lady Zubaydah's apartment. So arch-thief Ahmad Kamakim waited till midnight, when Canopus shone bright, and all creatures to sleep were dight whilst the Creator veiled them with the veil of night. Then he took his drawn sword in his right and his grappling-hook in his left, and repairing to the Caliph's sitting-saloon planted his scaling ladder and cast his grapnel on to the side of the terrace-roof ; then, raising the trap-door, let himself down into

¹ In order to keep his oath to the letter.

No. 21.

Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat.

“And repairing to the Caliph's sitting-saloon planted his scaling ladder and cast his grapnel on to the side of the terrace-roof; then, raising the trap-door, let himself down into the saloon, where he found the eunuchs asleep.”

Ala el-Din Abu al-Hasan

And regarding to the (king's) sitting-saloon he had his sitting-saloon and his grappin on to the side of the (king's) sitting-saloon the (king's) sitting-saloon, for himself, for himself it was the (king's) sitting-saloon, for himself of his royal hatat, together with his royal and royal signet, and set them all upon a case and he had also a golden lantern, adorned wire of gold, by which he set great all these things to the charge of the to the Lady Zubaydah's apartment Hamakim waited till midnight, when bright, and all creatures to sleep were veiled them with the veil of night.

and his grappin sitting-saloon

his grappin on to the side
 he let himself down

the saloon, where he found the eunuchs asleep. He drugged them with hemp-fumes¹; and, taking the Caliph's dress, dagger, rosary, kerchief, signet-ring, and the lanthorn whereupon were the pearls, returned whence he came and betook himself to the house of Ala al-Din, who had that night celebrated his wedding festivities with Jessamine, and had gone in unto her and gotten her with child. So arch-thief Ahmad Kamakim climbed over into his saloon, and raising one of the marble slabs from the sunken part of the floor² dug a hole under it, and laid the stolen things therein, all save the lanthorn, which he kept for himself. Then he plastered down the marble slab as it before was, and returning whence he came, went back to his own house, saying, "I will now tackle my drink and set this lanthorn before me and quaff the cup of its light."³ Now as soon as it was dawn of day, the Caliph went out into the sitting-chamber; and seeing the eunuchs drugged with hemp aroused them. Then he put his hand to the chair and found neither dress nor signet nor rosary nor dagger-sword nor kerchief nor lanthorn; whereat he was exceeding wroth and, donning the dress of anger, which was a scarlet suit,⁴ sat down in the Diwan. So the Wazir Ja'afar came forward and kissing ground before him, said, "Allah avert all evil from the Commander of the Faithful!" Answered the Caliph, "O Wazir, the evil is passing great!" Ja'afar asked, "What has happened?" so he told him what had occurred; and, behold! the Chief of Police appeared with Ahmad Kamakim, the robber, at his stirrup, when he found the Commander of the Faithful sore enraged. As soon as the Caliph saw him, he said to him, "O Emir Khalid, how goes Baghdad?" And he answered, "Safe and secure." Cried he, "Thou liest!" "How so, O Prince of True Believers?" asked the Emir. So he told him the case and added, "I charge thee to bring me back all the stolen things." Replied the Emir, "O Commander of the Faithful, the vinegar-worm is of and in the 1 "Tabannuj," literally "hemping" (drugging with hemp or henbane) is the equivalent in Arab medicine of our "anæsthetics." These have been used in surgery throughout the East for centuries before ether and chloroform became the fashion in the civilised West.

2 Arab. "Durká'ah," the lower part of the floor, opposed to the "liwán" or daïs. Liwán = Al-Aywán (Arab. and Pers.) the hall (including the daïs and the sunken parts).

3 i.e. he would toast it as he would a mistress.

4 This till very late years was the custom in Persia; and Fath Ali Shah never appeared in scarlet without ordering some horrible cruelties. In Dar-Fór wearing a red cashmere turband was a sign of wrath, and sending a blood-red dress to a subject meant that he would be slain.

vinegar, and no stranger can get at this place.¹" But the Caliph said, "Except thou bring me these things, I will put thee to death." Quoth he, "Ere thou slay me, slay Ahmad Kamakim, for none should know the robber and the traitor but the Captain of the Watch." Then came forward Ahmad Kamakim and said to the Caliph, "Accept my intercession for the Chief of Police, and I will be responsible to thee for the thief, and will track his trail till I find him; but give me two Kazis and two Assessors, for he who did this thing feareth thee not, nor doth he fear the Governor nor any other." Answered the Caliph, "Thou shalt have what thou wantest; but let search be made first in my palace and then in those of the Wazir and the Chief of the Sixty." Rejoined Ahmad Kamakim, "Thou sayest well, O Commander of the Faithful; belike the man that did this ill-deed be one who hath been reared in the King's household or in that of one of his officers." Cried the Caliph, "As my head liveth, whosoever shall have done the deed I will assuredly put him to death, be it mine own son!" Then Ahmad Kamakim received a written warrant to enter and perforce search the houses;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ahmad Kamakim got what he wanted, and received a written warrant to enter and perforce search the houses; so he fared forth, taking in his hand a rod² made of bronze and copper, iron and steel, of each three equal parts. He first searched the palace of the Caliph, then that of the Wazir Ja'afar; after which he went the round of the houses of the Chamberlains and the Viceroys till he came to that of Ala al-Din. Now when the Chief of the Sixty heard the clamour before his house, he left his wife Jessamine and went down and opening the door, found the Master of Police without in the midst of a tumultuous crowd. So he said, "What is the matter, O

¹ That is, this robbery was committed in the palace by some one belonging to it. References to vinegar are frequent; that of Egypt being famous in those days. "Optimum et laudatissimum acetum a Romanis habebatur Ægyptum" (Facciolati); and possibly it was sweetened: the Gesta (Tale xvii.) mentions "must and vinegar." In Arab. Proverbs, "One mind by vinegar and another by wine" = each mind goes its own way. (Arab. Prov. ii. 628); or, "with good and bad," vinegar being spoilt wine.

² We have not heard the last of this old "dowsing rod": the latest form of rhabdomanancy is an electrical rod invented in the United States.

Emir Khalid?" Thereupon the Chief told him the case, and Ala al-Din said, "Enter my house and search it." The Governor replied, "Pardon, O my lord; thou art a man in whom trust is reposed and Allah forbend that the trusty turn traitor!" Quoth Ala al-Din, "There is no help for it but that my house be searched." So the Chief of Police entered, attended by the Kazi and his Assessors; whereupon Ahmad Kamakim went straight to the depressed floor of the saloon and came to the slab, under which he had buried the stolen goods, and let the rod fall upon it with such violence that the marble broke in sunder, and behold! something glittered underneath. Then said he, "Bismillah; in the name of Allah! Mashallah; whatso Allah willeth! By the blessing of our coming a hoard hath been hit upon; wait while we go down into this hiding-place and see what is therein." So the Kazi and the Assessors looked into the hole, and finding there the stolen goods, drew up a statement¹ of how they had discovered them in Ala al-Din's house, to which they set their seals. Then they bade seize upon Ala al-Din and took his turband from his head, and officially registered all his moneys and effects which were in the mansion. Meanwhile, arch-thief Ahmad Kamakim laid hands on Jessamine, who was with child by Ala al-Din, and committed her to his mother, saying, "Deliver her to Khatun, the Governor's lady"; so the old woman took her and carried her to the wife of the Master of Police. Now as soon as Habzalanı Bazazah saw her, health and heart returned to him and he arose without stay or delay, and joyed with exceeding joy and would have drawn near her; but she pluckt a dagger from her girdle and said, "Keep off from me, or I will kill thee and kill myself after." Exclaimed his mother, "O strumpet, let my son have his will of thee!" But Jessamine answered, "O bitch, by what law is it lawful for a woman to marry two men; and how shall the dog be admitted to the place of the lion?" With this, the ugly youth's love-longing redoubled, and he sickened for yearning and unfulfilled desire; and refusing food returned to his pillow. Then said his mother to her, "O harlot, how canst thou make me thus to sorrow for my son? Needs must I punish thee with torture; and as for Ala al-Din, he will assuredly be hanged." "And I will die for love of him," answered Jessamine. Then the Governor's wife arose and stripped her of her jewels and silken raiment and clothing her in petticoat-trousers of sack-cloth and a shift of hair-cloth, sent her down into the kitchen and made her a scullery-wench, saying, "The reward for thy constancy shall be to break up fire-wood and peel onions and set fire under the cooking-pots." Quoth she, "I am willing to suffer all manner of hardships and servitude, but I will not suffer the sight of thy son." However, Allah inclined the hearts of the slave-girls to her, and they used to do her service in the kitchen. Such was the case with Jessamine; but as regards Ala al-Din they carried him, together with the stolen goods, to the Diwan where the Caliph still sat upon his throne. And behold, the King looked upon his effects and said, "Where did ye find them?" They replied, "In the very middle of the house belonging to Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat"; whereat the Caliph was filled with wrath and took the things, but found not the lanthorn among them and said, "O Ala al-Din, where is the lanthorn?" He answered, "I stole it not; I know naught of it; I never saw it; I can give no information about it!" Said the Caliph, "O traitor, how cometh it that I brought thee near unto me and thou hast cast me out afar, and I trusted in thee and thou betrayest me?" And he commanded to hang him. So the Chief of Police took him and went down with him into the city, whilst the crier preceded them proclaiming aloud and saying, "This is the reward and the least of the reward he shall receive who doth treason against the Caliphs of True Belief!" And the folk flocked to the place where the gallows stood. Thus far concerning him; but as regards Ahmad al-Danaf, Ala al-Din's adopted father, he was sitting making merry with his followers in a garden and carousing and pleasuring, when lo! in came one of the water-carriers of the Diwan and, kissing the hand of Ahmad al-Danaf, said to him, "O Captain Ahmad, O Danaf! thou sittest at thine ease with water flowing at thy feet,¹ and thou knowest not what hath happened." Asked Ahmad, "What is it?" and the other answered, "They have gone down to the gallows with thy son Ala al-Din, adopted by a covenant before Allah!" Quoth Ahmad, "What is the remedy here, O Hasan Shuman, and what sayst thou of this?" He replied, "Assuredly Ala al-Din is innocent, and this blame hath come to him from some one enemy."² Quoth Ahmad, "What counsell'est thou?" and Hasan said, "We must rescue him, Inshallah!" Then he went to the jail and said to the gaoler, "Give us some one who deserveth death." So he gave him one that was likest of men to Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat; and they covered his head and carried him to the place of execution between Ahmad al-Danaf and Ali al-Zaybak of Cairo.¹ Now they had brought Ala al-Din to the gibbet, to hang him, but Ahmad al-Danaf came forward and set his foot on that of the hangman, who said, "Give me room to do my duty." He replied, "O accursed, take this man and hang him in Ala al-Din's stead; for he is innocent and we will ransom him with this fellow, even as Abraham ransomed Ishmael with the ram."² So the hangman seized the man and hanged him in lieu of Ala al-Din; whereupon Ahmad and Ali took Ala al-Din and carried him to Ahmad's quarters and when there, Ala al-Din turned to him and said, "O my sire and chief, Allah requite thee with the best of good!" Quoth he, "O Ala al-Din"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ This is the procès verbal always drawn up on such occasions.

¹ The sight of running water makes a Persian long for strong drink, as the sight of a fine view makes the Turk feel hungry.

² Arab. "Min wahid aduww," a peculiarly Egyptian or rather Cairene phrase.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Calamity Ahmad cried, "O Ala al-Din, what is this deed thou hast done? The mercy of Allah be on him who said:—Whoso trusteth thee betray him not, e'en if thou be a traitor. Now the Caliph set thee in high place about him and styled thee 'Trusty' and 'Faithful'; how, then, couldst thou deal thus with him and steal his goods?" "By the Most Great Name, O my father and chief!" replied Ala al-Din, "I had no hand in this, nor did I such deed, nor know I who did it." Quoth Ahmad, "Of a surety none did this but a manifest enemy, and whoso doth aught shall be requited for his deed; but, O Ala al-Din, thou canst sojourn no longer in Baghdad, for Kings, O my son, may not pass from one thing to another, and when they go in quest of a man, ah! longsome is his travail." "Whither shall I go, O my

¹ Al-Danaf=the Distressing Sickness: the title would be Ahmad the Calamity. Al-Zaybak (the Quicksilver)=Mercury Ali: Hasan "Shuman" =a pestilent fellow. We shall meet all these worthies again and again: see the Adventures of Mercury Ali of Cairo, vol. v., night dccviii., a sequel to The Rogueries of Dalilah, vol. v., night dcxcviii.

² For the "Sacrifice-place of Ishmael" (not Isaac) see my Pilgrimage, (iii. 306). According to all modern Arab ideas Ishmael, being the eldest son, was the chief of the family after his father. I have noticed that this is the old oldquarrel between the Arabs and their cousins the Hebrews.

chief?" asked Ala al-Din; and he answered, "O my son, I will bring thee to Alexandria, for it is a blessed place; its threshold is green and its sojourn is agreeable." And Ala al-Din rejoined, "I hear and I obey, O my chief!" So Ahmad said to Hasan Shuman, "Be mindful and when the Caliph asketh for me, say:—He is gone touring about the provinces." Then, taking Ala al-Din, he went forth of Baghdad and stayed not going till they came to the outlying vineyards and gardens, where they met two Jews of the Caliph's tax-gatherers riding on mules. Quoth Ahmad al-Danaf to these, "Give me the black-mail¹"; and quoth they, "Why should we pay thee black-mail?" whereto he replied, "Because I am the watchman of this valley." So they gave him each an hundred gold pieces, after which he slew them and took their mules, one of which he mounted, whilst Ala al-Din bestrode the other. Then they rode on till they came to the city of Ayás² and put up their beasts for the night at the Khan. And when morning dawned, Ala al-Din sold his own mule and committed that of Ahmad to the charge of the door-keeper of the caravanserai, after which they took ship from Ayas port and sailed to Alexandria. Here they landed and walked up to the bazar and behold! there was a broker crying a shop and a chamber behind it for nine hundred and fifty dinars. Upon this Ala al-Din bid a thousand, which the broker accepted, for the premises belonged to the Treasury; and the seller handed over to him the keys and the buyer opened the shop and found the inner parlour furnished with carpets and cushions. Moreover, he found there a store-room full of sails and masts, cordage and seamen's chests, bags of beads and cowrie³-shells, stirrups, battle-axes, maces, knives, scissiors and such matters, for the last owner of the shop had been a dealer in second-hand goods.⁴ So he took his seat in the shop and Ahmad al-Danaf said to him, "O my son, the shop and the room and that which is therein are become thine; so tarry thou here and buy and sell; and repine not at thy lot for Almighty Allah blesseth trade." After this he abode with him three days, and on the fourth he took leave of him, saying, "Abide here till I go back and bring thee the Caliph's pardon and learn who hath

¹ This black-mail was still paid to the Badawin of Ramlah (Alexandria) till the bombardment in 1881.

² The famous Issus of Cilicia, now a port-village on the Gulf of Scanderoon.

³ Arab. "Wada'a" = the concha veneris, then used as small change

⁴ Arab. "Sakati" = a dealer in "castaway" articles, such as old metal, amaged goods, the pluck and feet of animals, etc.

played thee this trick." Then he shipped for Ayas, where he took the mule from the inn, and returning to Baghdad met Pestilence Hasan and his followers, to whom said he, "Hath the Caliph asked after me?" and he replied, "No, nor hast thou come to his thought." So he resumed his service about the Caliph's person, and set himself to sniff about for news of Ala al-Din's case, till one day he heard the Caliph say to the Wazir, "See, O Ja'afar, how Ala al-Din dealt with me!" Replied the Minister, "O Commander of the Faithful, thou hast requited him with hanging, and hath he not met with his reward?" Quoth he, "O Wazir, I have a mind to go down and see him hanging"; and the Wazir answered, "Do what thou wilt, O Commander of the Faithful." So the Caliph, accompanied by Ja'afar, went down to the place of execution and raising his eyes, saw the hanged man to be other than Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, surnamed the Trusty, and said, "O Wazir, this is not Ala al-Din!" "How knowest thou that it is not he?" asked the Minister, and the Caliph answered, "Ala al-Din was short and this one is tall." Quoth Ja'afar, "Hanging stretcheth." Quoth the Caliph, "Ala al-Din was fair and this one's face is black." Said Ja'afar, "Knowest thou not, O Commander of the Faithful, that death is followed by blackness!" Then the Caliph bade take down the body from the gallows-tree and they found the names of the two Shaykhs, Abu Bakr and Omar, written on its heels¹; whereupon cried the Caliph, "O Wazir, Ala al-Din was a Sunnite, and this fellow is a Rejector, a Shi'ah." He answered, "Glory be to Allah who knoweth the hidden things, while we know not whether this was Ala al-Din or other than he." Then the Caliph bade bury the body and they buried it; and Ala al-Din was forgotten as though he never had been. Such was his case; but as regards Habzalam Bazazah, the Emir Khalid's son, he ceased not to languish for love and longing till he died and they joined him to the dust. And as for the young wife Jessamine, she accomplished the months of her pregnancy and being taken with labour-pains, gave birth to a boy-child like unto the moon. And when her fellow slave-girls said to her, "What wilt thou name him?" she answered, "Were his father well he had named him; but now I will name him Aslán.²" She gave him

1 The popular tale of Burckhardt's death in Cairo was that the names of the first three Caliphs were found written upon his slipper-soles, and that he was put to death by decree of the Olema. It is the merest nonsense, as the great traveller died of dysentery in the house of my old friend John Thurburn, and was buried outside the Bab al-Nasr of Cairo, where his tomb was restored by the late Rogers Bey (Pilgrimage, i. 123).

2 Prob. a mis-spelling for Arslán, in Turk a lion, and in slang a piastre.

suck for two successive years, then weaned him, and he crawled and walked. Now it so came to pass that one day, whilst his mother was busied with the service of the kitchen, the boy went out and seeing the stairs, mounted to the guest-chamber.¹ And the Emir Khalid, who was sitting there took him upon his lap, and glorified his Lord for that which he had created and fashioned; then closely eyeing his face, the Governor saw that he was the likeliest of all creatures to Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat. Presently, his mother Jessamine sought for him and finding him not, mounted to the guest-chamber, where she saw the Emir seated, with the child playing in his lap, for Allah had inclined his heart to the boy. And when the child espied his mother, he would have thrown himself upon her; but the Emir held him tight to his bosom and said to Jessamine, "Come hither, O damsel." So she came to him when he said to her, "Whose son is this?" and she replied, "He is my son and the fruit of my vitals." "And who is his father?" asked the Emir; and she answered, "His father was Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, but now he is become thy son." Quoth Khalid, "In very sooth Ala al-Din was a traitor." Quoth she, "Allah deliver him from treason! The heavens forbend and forbid that the 'Trusty' should be a traitor." Then said he, "When this boy shall grow up and reach man's estate and say to thee:—Who is my father? say to him:—Thou art the son of the Emir Khalid, Governor and Chief of Police." And she answered, "I hear and I obey." Then he circumcised the boy and reared him with the goodliest rearing, and engaged for him a professor of law and religious science, and an expert pensman who taught him to read and write; so he read the Koran twice and learnt it by heart, and he grew up, saying to the Emir, "O my father!" Moreover, the Governor used to go down with him to the tilting-ground and assemble horsemen and teach the lad the fashion of fight and fray, and the place to plant lance-thrust and sabre-stroke; so that by the time he was fourteen years old he became a valiant wight and accomplished knight, and gained the rank of Emir. Now it chanced one day that Aslan fell in with Ahmad Kamakim, the arch-thief, and accompanied him as cup-companion to the tavern² and behold, Ahmad took out the jewelled lanthorn he had stolen from the Caliph and setting it before him, pledged the wine cup to its light, till he became drunken. So Aslan said to him, "O Captain, give me this lanthorn"; but he replied, "I cannot give it to thee." Asked Aslan, "Why not?" and Ahmad answered, "Because lives have been lost for it." "Whose life?" enquired Aslan; and Ahmad rejoined, "There came hither a man who was made Chief of the Sixty; he was named Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, and he lost his life through this lanthorn." Quoth Aslan, "And what was that story, and what brought about his death?" Quoth Ahmad Kamakim, "Thou hadst an elder brother by name Habzalam Bazazah, and when he reached the age of sixteen and was ripe for marriage, thy father would have bought him a slave-girl named Jessamine." And he went on to tell him the whole story from first to last of Habzalam Bazazah's illness and what befell Ala al-Din in his innocence. When Aslan heard this, he said in thought, "Haply this slave-girl was my mother Jessamine, and my father was none other than Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." So the boy went out from him sorrowful, and met Calamity Ahmad, who at sight of him exclaimed, "Glory be to Him unto Whom none is like!" Asked Hasan the Pestilence, "Whereat dost thou marvel, O my chief?" and Ahmad the Calamity replied, "At the make of yonder boy Aslan, for he is the likeliest of human creatures to Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." Then he called the lad and said to him, "O Aslan, what is thy mother's name?" to which he replied, "She is called the damsel Jessamine"; and the other said, "Harkye, Aslan, be of good cheer and keep thy eyes cool and clear; for thy father was none other than Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat; but O my son, go thou in to thy mother and question her of thy father." He said, "Hearkening and obedience," and going in to his mother put the question; whereupon quoth she, "Thy sire is the Emir Khalid!" "Not so," rejoined he, "my father was none other than Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." At this the mother wept and said, "Who acquainted thee with this, O my son?" And he answered, "Ahmad al-Danaf, Captain of the Guard." So she told him the whole story, saying, "O my son, the True hath prevailed, and the False hath failed¹; know that Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat.

¹ Arab. "Maka'ad"; lit. = sitting-room.

² Arab. "Khammārah"; still the popular term throughout Egypt for a European Hotel. It is not always intended to be insulting but it is, meaning the place where Franks meet to drink forbidden drinks.

¹ A reminiscence of Mohammed who cleansed the Ka'abah of its 360 idols (of which 73 names are given by Freytag, Einleitung, etc., pp 270, 342-357) by touching them with his staff, whereupon all fell to the ground; and the Prophet cried (Koran, xvii. 84), "Truth is come, and falsehood is vanished: verily, falsehood is a thing that vanisheth" (magna est veritas, etc.). Amongst the "idols" are said to have been a statue of Abraham and the horns of the ram sacrificed in lieu of Ishmael, which (if true) would prove conclusively that the Abrahamic legend at Meccah is of ancient date and not a fiction of Al-Islam. Hence, possibly, the respect of the Judaising Tobbas of Himyarland for the Ka'abah (Pilgrimage, iii. 295).

was indeed thy sire, but it was none save the Emir Khalid who reared thee and adopted thee as his son. And now, O my child, when thou seest Ahmad al-Danaf the Captain, do thou say to him: I conjure thee, by Allah, O my chief, take my blood-revenge on the murderer of my father Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." So he went out from his mother—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

*
Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Aslan went out from his mother, and betaking himself to Calamity Ahmad kissed his hand. Quoth the captain, "What ailcth thee, O Aslan?" and quoth he, "I know now for certain that my father was Ali al-Din Abu al-Shamat and I would have thee take my blood-revenge on his murderer." He asked, "And who was thy father's murderer?" whereto Aslan answered, "Ahmad Kamakim, the arch-thief." "Who told thee this?" enquired he; and Aslan rejoined, "I saw in his hand the jewelled lanthorn which was lost with the rest of the Caliph's gear, and I said to him:—Give me this lanthorn! but he refused, saying, Lives have been lost on account of this; and told me it was he who had broken into the palace and stolen the articles and deposited them in my father's house." Then said Ahmad al-Danaf, "When thou seest the Emir Khalid don his harness of war say to him:—Equip me like thyself and take me with thee. Then do thou go forth and perform some feat of prowess before the Commander of the Faithful, and he will say to thee:—Ask a boon of me, O Aslan! And do thou make answer, I ask of thee this boon, that thou take my blood-revenge on my father's murderer. If he say, Thy father is yet alive and is the Emir Khalid, the Chief of the Police; answer thou:—My father was Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, and the Emir Khalid hath a claim upon me only as the foster-father who adopted me. Then tell him all that passed between thee and Ahmad Kamakim and say:—O Prince of True Believers, order him to be searched and I will bring the lanthorn forth from his bosom." Thereupon said Aslan to him, "I hear and obey"; and returning to the Emir Khalid found him making ready to repair to the Caliph's court, and said to him, "I would fain have thee arm and harness me like thyself and take me with thee to the Diwan." So he equipped him and carried him thither. Then the Caliph sallied forth of Baghdad with his troops and they pitched tents and pavilions without the city; whereupon the host divided into two parties and forming ranks fell to playing Polo, one striking the ball with the mallet, and another striking it back to him. Now there was among the troops a spy, who had been hired to slay the Caliph; so he took the ball and smiting it with the bat drove it straight at the Caliph's face, when behold, Aslan fended it off and catching it drove it back at him who smote it, so that it struck him between the shoulders and he fell to the ground. The Caliph exclaimed, "Allah bless thee, O Aslan!" and they all dismounted and sat on chairs. Then the Caliph bade them bring the smiter of the ball before him, and said, "Who tempted thee to do this thing and art thou friend or foe?" Quoth he, "I am thy foe, and it was my purpose to kill thee." Asked the Caliph, "And wherefore? Art not a Moslem?" Replied the spy, "No! I am a Rejecter.¹" So the Caliph bade them put him to death and said to Aslan, "Ask a boon of me." Quoth he, "I ask of thee this boon, that thou take my blood-revenge on my father's murderer." He said, "Thy father is alive and there he stands on his two feet." "And who is he?" asked Aslan; and the Caliph answered, "He is the Emir Khalid, Chief of Police." Rejoined Aslan, "O Commander of the Faithful, he is no father of mine, save by right of fosterage; my father was none other than Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat." "Then thy father was a traitor," cried the Caliph. "Allah forbid, O Commander of the Faithful," rejoined Aslan, "that the 'Trusty' should be a traitor! But how did he betray thee?" Quoth the Caliph, "He stole my habit and what was therewith." Aslan retorted, "O Commander of the Faithful, Allah forbend that my father should be a traitor! But, O my lord, when thy habit was lost and found didst thou likewise recover the lanthorn which was stolen from thee?" Answered the Caliph, "We never got it back"; and Aslan said, "I saw it in the hands of Ahmad Kamakim and begged it of him; but he refused to give it me, saying:—Lives have been lost on account of this. Then he told me of the sickness of Habzalam Bazazah, son of the Emir Khalid, by reason of his passion for the damsel Jessamine, and how he himself was released from bonds, and that it was he who stole the habit and the lamp; so do thou, O Commander of the Faithful, take my blood-revenge for my father on him who murdered him." At once the Caliph cried "Seize ye Ahmad Kamakim!" and they seized him; whereupon he asked, "Where be the Captain, Ahmad al-Danaf?" And when he was summoned the Caliph bade him search Kamakim; so he put his hand into the thief's bosom and pulled out the lanthorn. Said the Caliph, "Come hither, thou traitor; whence hadst thou this lanthorn?" and Kamakim replied, "I bought it, O Commander of the Faithful!" The Caliph rejoined, "Where didst thou buy it?" Then they beat him till he owned that he had stolen the lanthorn, the habit and the rest, and the Caliph said, "What moved thee to do this thing, O traitor, and ruin Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, the Trusty and Faithful?" Then he bade them lay hands on him and on the Chief of Police, but the Chief said, "O Commander of the Faithful, indeed I am unjustly treated; thou badest me hang him and I had no knowledge of this trick, for the plot was contrived between the old woman and Ahmad Kamakim and my wife. I crave thine intercession,¹ O Aslan." So Aslan interceded for him with the Caliph, who said, "What hath Allah done with this youngster's mother?" Answered Khalid, "She is with me," and the Caliph continued, "I command that thou order thy wife to dress her in her own clothes and ornaments and restore her to her former degree, a lady of rank; and do thou remove the seals from Ala al-Din's house and give his son possession of his estate." "I hear and obey," answered Khalid; and going forth, gave the order to his wife who clad Jessamine in her own apparel; whilst he himself removed the seals from Ala al-Din's house and gave Aslan the keys. Then said the Caliph, "Ask a boon of me, O Aslan:" and he replied, "I beg of thee the boon to unite me with my father." Whereat the Caliph wept and said, "Most like thy sire was he that was hanged and is dead; but by the life of my forefathers, whoso bringeth me the glad news that he is yet in the bondage of this life I will give him all he seeketh!" Then came forward Ahmad al-Danaf and, kissing ground between his hands, said, "Grant me indemnity, O Commander of the Faithful!" "Thou hast it," answered the Caliph; and Calamity Ahmad said, "I give thee the good news that Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, the Trusty, the Faithful, is alive and well." Quoth the Caliph, "What is this thou sayest?" Quoth Al-Danaf, "As thy head liveth I say sooth; for I ransomed him with another, of those who deserved death; and carried him to Alexandria, where I opened for him a shop and set him up as dealer in second-hand goods." Then said the Prince of True Believers—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ This was evidently written by a Sunni as the Shī'ahs claim to be the only true Moslems. Lane tells an opposite story (ii. 329). It suggests the common question in the South of Europe, "Are you a Christian or a Protestant?"

¹ Arab. "Ana fi jirat-ak!" a phrase to be remembered as useful in time of danger.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph ordered Calamity Ahmad, saying, "I charge thee fetch him to me"; and the other replied, "To hear is to obey"; whereupon the Caliph bade them give him ten thousand gold pieces, and he fared forth for Alexandria. On this wise it happed with Aslan; but as regards his father Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, he sold in course of time all that was in his shop excepting a few things, and amongst them a long bag of leather. And happening to shake the bag, there fell out a jewel which filled the palm of the hand, hanging to a chain of gold and having many facets but especially five, whereon were names and talismanic characters, as they were ant-tracks. So he rubbed each face; but none answered him,¹ and he said to himself, "Doubtless it is a piece of variegated onyx"; and then hung it up in the shop. And behold, a Consul² passed along the street; and raising his eyes saw the jewel hanging up; so he seated himself over against the shop and said to Ala al-Din, "O my lord, is the jewel for sale?" He answered, "All I have is for sale." Thereupon the Frank said, "Wilt thou sell me that same for eighty thousand dinars?" "Allah open!" replied Ala al-Din. The Frank asked, "Wilt thou sell it for an hundred thousand dinars?" and he answered, "I sell it to thee for an hundred thousand dinars; pay me down the moneys." Quoth the Consul, "I cannot carry about such sum as its price, for there be robbers and sharpers in Alexandria; but come with me to my ship and I will pay thee the price and give thee to boot a bale of Angora wool, a bale of satin, a bale of velvet, and a bale of broadcloth." So Ala al-Din rose and locked up his shop, after giving the jewel to the Frank, and committed the keys to his neighbour, saying, "Keep these keys in trust for me, whilst I go with this Consul to his ship and return with the price of my jewel. If I be long absent and there come to thee Ahmad al-Danaf, the Captain who stablished me in this shop, give him the keys and tell him where I am." Then he went with the Consul to his craft, and no sooner had he boarded it than the Frank set him a stool and making him sit down, said to his men, "Bring the money." So they brought it and he paid him the price of the jewel and gave him the four bales he had promised him and one over; after which he said to him, "O my lord, honour me by accepting a bite or a sup." And Ala al-Din answered, "If thou have any water, give me to drink." So the Frank called for sherbets and they brought drink drugged with Bhang, of which no sooner had Ala al-Din drunk than he fell over on his back; whereupon they stowed away the chairs and shipped the shoving-poles and made sail. Now the wind blew fair for them till it drove them into blue water; and when they were beyond sight of land the Kaptán¹ bade bring Ala al-Din up out of the hold and made him smell the counter-drug of Bhang; whereupon he opened his eyes and said, "Where am I?" He replied, "Thou art bound and in my power, and if thou hadst said, Allah open! to an hundred thousand dinars for the jewel, I would have bidden thee more." "What art thou?" asked Ala al-Din, and the other answered, "I am a sea-captain, and mean to carry thee to my sweetheart." Now as they were talking, behold, a ship hove in sight carrying forty Moslem merchants; so the Frank captain attacked the vessel and made fast to it with grappling-irons; then he boarded it with his men and took it and plundered it; after which he sailed on with his prize till he reached the city of Genoa. There the Kaptan, who was carrying off Ala al-Din, landed and repaired to a palace whose postern gave upon the sea, and behold! there came down to him a damsel in a chin-veil, who said, "Hast thou brought the jewel and the owner?" "I have brought them both," answered he; and she said, "Then give me the jewel." So he gave it to her; and returning to the port fired his cannon to announce his safe return; whereupon the King of the city, being notified of that Kaptan's arrival, came down to receive him, and asked him, "How hath been this voyage?" He answered, "A right prosperous one; and while voyaging I have made prize of a ship with one-and-forty Moslem merchants." Said the King, "Land them at the port"; so he landed the merchants in irons and Ala al-Din among the rest; and the King and the Kaptan mounted and made the captives walk before them till they reached the audience-chamber, when the Franks seated themselves and caused the prisoners to pass in parade order, one by one before the King who said to the first, "O Moslem, whence comest thou?" He answered, "From Alexandria"; whereupon the King said, "O headsman, put him to death." So the sworder smote him with his sword and cut off his head:

¹ i.e. no Jinni, or Slave of the Jewel, was there to answer.

² Arab. "Kunsul" (pron. "Gunsul") which here means a well-to-do Frank, and shows the modern date of the tale as it stands.

¹ From the Ital. "Capitano" The mention of cannon and other terms in this tale shows that either it was written during the last century or that it has been mishandled by copyists.

and thus it fared with the second and the third, till forty were dead, and there remained but Ala al-Din, who drank the cup of his comrades' sighs and agony, and said to himself, "Allah have mercy on thee, O Ala al-Din! Thou art a dead man." Then said the King to him, "And thou, what countryman art thou?" He answered, "I am of Alexandria"; and the King said, "O headsman, strike off his head." So the sworder raised arm and sword, and was about to strike, when behold! an old woman of venerable aspect presented herself before the King, who rose to do her honour, and said to him, "O King, did I not bid thee remember, when the Captain came back with captives, to keep one or two for the convent, to serve in the church?" The King replied, "O my mother, would thou hadst come a while earlier! But take this one that is left." So she turned to Ala al-Din and said to him, "Say, wilt thou serve in the church, or shall I let the King slay thee?" Quoth he, "I will serve in the church." So she took him and carried him forth of the court and went to the church, where he said to her, "What service must I do?" She replied, "Thou must rise with the dawn, and take five mules and go with them to the forest, and there cut dry fire-wood and saw it short and bring it to the convent-kitchen. Then must thou take up the carpets and sweep and wipe the stone and marble pavements, and lay the carpets down again as they were; after which thou must take two bushels and a half of wheat and bolt it and grind it and knead it and make it into cracknels¹ for the convent; and thou must take also a bushel² of lentils, and sift and crush and cook them. Then must thou fetch water in barrels and fill the four fountains; after which thou must take three hundred and threescore and six wooden bowls and crumble the cracknels therein and pour of the lentil-pottage over each and bear to every monk and patriarch his bowl." Said Ala al-Din,³ "Take me back to the King and let him kill me, it were easier to me than this service." Replied the old woman, "If thou do truly and rightly the service that is due from thee thou shalt escape death; but, if thou do it not, I will let the King kill thee." And with these words Ala al-Din was left sitting heavy at heart. Presently behold, the old woman came in and said to him, "Why hast thou not done thy service in the 1 Arab. "Mininah"; a biscuit of flour and clarified butter.

2 Arab. "Waybah"; the sixth part of the Ardabb = 6 to 7 English gallons.

3 He speaks in half-jest à la Fellak; and reminds us of "Hangman, drive on the cart!"

church?" Answered he, "How many hands have I, that I should suffice for all this work?" She rejoined, "Thou fool I brought thee not hither except to work?" And she added, "Take, O my son, this rod (which was of copper capped with a cross) and go forth into the highway and when thou meetest the governor of the city say to him:—I summon thee to the service of the church, in the name of our Lord the Messiah. And he will not disobey thee. Then make him take the wheat, sift, grind, bolt, knead, and bake it into cracknels; and if any gainsay thee, beat him and fear none." "To hear is to obey," answered he, and did as she said, and never ceased pressing great and small into his service; nor did he leave to do thus for the space of seventeen years. Now one day, as he sat in church, lo! the old woman came to him and said, "Go forth of the convent." He asked, "Whither shall I go?" and she answered, "Thou canst pass the night in a tavern or with one of thy comrades." Quoth he, "Why dost thou send me forth of the church?" and quoth she, "The Princess Husn Maryam, daughter of Yohanná,¹ King of this city, purposeth to visit the church, and it befitteth not that any abide in her way." So he made a show of obeying her orders, and rose up and pretended that he was leaving the church; but he said in his mind, "I wonder whether the Princess is like our women or fairer than they! At any rate I will not go till I have had a look at her." So he hid himself in a closet with a window looking into the church and, as he watched, behold, in came the King's daughter. He cast at her one glance of eyes that cost him a thousand sighs, for he found her like the full moon when it cometh swimming out of the clouds; and he saw with her a young lady—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Ala al-Din looked at the King's daughter, he saw with her

¹ Yochanan (whom Jehovah has blessed), Jewish for John, is probably a copy of the Chaldean Euaanes, the Oannes of Berosus = Ea Khan, Hea the fish. The Greeks made it Joannes; the Arabs "Yohanná" (contracted to "Hanná," Christian), and "Yáhiyá" (Moslem). Prester (Priest) John is probable Ung Khan, the historian prince conquered and slain by Janghiz Khan in A.D. 1202. The modern history of "John" is very extensive; there may be a full hundred varieties and derivations of the name. "Husn Maryam" = the beauty (spiritual, etc.) of the B.V.

a young lady to whom he heard her say, "Thy company hath cheered me, O Zubaydah." So he looked straitly at the damsel and found her to be none other than his dead wife, Zubaydah the Lutist. Then the Princess said to Zubaydah, "Come, play us an air on the lute." But she answered, "I will make no music for thee till thou grant my wish and keep thy word to me." Asked the Princess, "And what did I promise thee?" and Zubaydah answered, "That thou wouldst reunite me with my husband Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, the Trusty, the Faithful." Rejoined the Princess, "O Zubaydah, be of good cheer and keep thine eyes cool and clear; play us a piece as a thank-offering and an ear-feast for reunion with thy husband Ala al-Din." "Where is he?" asked Zubaydah, and Maryam answered, "He is in yonder closet listening to our words." So Zubaydah played on the lute a melody which had made a rock dance for glee; and when Ala al-Din heard it, his bowels yearned towards her and he came forth from the closet, and throwing himself upon his wife Zubaydah strained her to his bosom. She also knew him, and the twain embraced and fell to the ground in a swoon. Then came forward the Princess Husn Maryam and sprinkled rose-water on them, till they revived, when she said to them, "Allah hath reunited you." Replied Ala al-Din, "By thy kind offices, O lady." Then, turning to his wife, he said to her, "O Zubaydah, thou didst surely die and we tombed thee in the tomb: how then returnedst thou to life and camest thou to this place?" She answered, "O my lord, I did not die; but an Aun¹ of the Jinn snatched me up and flew with me hither. She whom thou buriedst was a Jinniyah, who shaped herself to my shape and feigned herself dead; but when you entombed her she broke open the tomb and came forth from it and returned to the service of this her mistress, the Princess Husn Maryam. As for me I was possessed² and when I opened my eyes, I found myself with this Princess thou seest; so I said to her:—Why hast thou brought me hither. Replied she:—I am predestined to marry thy husband, Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat: wilt thou, then, O Zubaydah, accept me to co-consort, a night for me and a night for thee? Rejoined I:—To hear is to obey, O my lady, but where is my husband? Quoth she:—Upon his forehead is written what Allah hath decreed to him; as soon as the writing which is there writ is fulfilled to him, there is no help for it but he come hither, and we will beguile the time of our separation from him with songs and playing upon instruments of music, till it please Allah to unite us with him. So I abode all these days with her till Allah brought us together in this church.” Then Husn Maryam turned to him and said, “O my Lord Ala al-Din, wilt thou be to me baron and I be to thee femme?” Quoth he, “O my lady, I am a Moslem, and thou art a Nazarene, so how can I intermarry with thee?” Quoth she, “Allah forbid that I should be an infidel! Nay, I am a Moslemah; for these eighteen years I have held fast the Faith of Al-Islam, and I am pure of any creed other than that of the Islamite.” Then said he, “O my lady, I desire a return to my native land”; and she replied, “Know that I see written on thy forehead things which thou must needs accomplish, and then thou shalt win to thy will. Moreover, be lief and fain, O Ala al-Din, that there hath been born to thee a son named Aslan; who now, being arrived at age of discretion, sitteth in thy place with the Caliph. Know also that Truth hath prevailed, and that Falsehood naught availed; and that the Lord hath withdrawn the curtain of secrecy from him who stole the Caliph’s goods, that is, Ahmad Kamakim, the arch-thief and traitor; and he now lieth bound and in jail. And know, further, ’twas I who sent thee the jewel, and had it put in the bag where thou foundest it, and ’twas I who sent the captain that brought thee and the jewel; for thou must know that the man is enamoured of me and seeketh my favours and would possess me; but I refused to yield to his wishes or let him have his will of me; and I said to him:—Thou shalt never have me till thou bring me the jewel and its owner. So I gave him an hundred purses and despatched him to thee, in the habit of a merchant, whereas he is a captain and a war-man; and when they led thee to thy death after slaying the forty captives, I also sent thee this old woman to save thee from slaughter.” Said he, “Allah requite thee for us with all good! Indeed, thou hast done well.” Then Husn Maryam renewed at his hands her profession of Al-Islam; and when he was assured of the truth of her speech, he said to her, “O my lady, tell me what are the virtues of this jewel and whence cometh it?” She answered, “This jewel came from an enchanted hoard, and it hath five virtues which will profit us in time of need. Now my lady-grandmother, the mother of my father, was an enchantress and skilled in solving secrets and finding hidden treasures from one of the which came the jewel into her hands. And as I grew up and reached the age of fourteen, I read the Evangel and other books and I found the name of Mohammed (whom Allah bless and preserve!) in the four books, namely the Evangel, the Pentateuch, the Psalms and the Koran¹; so I believed in Mohammed and became a Moslemah, being certain and assured that none is worship-worth save Allah Almighty, and that to the Lord of all mankind no faith is acceptable save that of Al-Islam. Now when my lady-grandmother fell sick, she gave me this jewel and taught me its five virtues. Moreover, before she died, my father said to her:—Take thy tablets of geomancy and throw a figure, and tell us the issue of my affair and what will befall me. And she foretold him that the far-off one² should die, slain by the hand of a captive from Alexandria. So he swore to kill every prisoner from that place and told the Kaptan of this, saying:—There is no help for it but thou fall on the ships of the Moslems and seize them, and whomsoever thou findest of Alexandria kill him or bring him to me. The Captain did his bidding until he had slain as many in number as the hairs of his head. Then my grandmother died and I took a geomantic tablet, being minded and determined to know the future, and I said to myself:—Let me see who will wed me! Whereupon I threw a figure and found that none should be my husband save one called Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat, the Trusty, the Faithful. At this I marvelled and waited till the times were accomplished and I forgathered with thee.” So Ala al-Din took her to wife and said to her, “I desire to return to my own country.” Quoth she, “If it be so, rise up and come with me.” Then she took him and hiding him in a closet of her palace, went in to her father, who said to her, “O my daughter, my heart is exceeding heavy this day; sit down and let us make merry with wine, I and thou.” So she sat down with him and called for a table of wine; and she plied him till he lost his wits, when she drugged a cup with Bhang, and he drank it off and fell upon his back. Then she brought Ala al-Din out of the closet and said to him, "Come; verily thine enemy lieth prostrate, for I made him drunk and drugged him; so do thou with him as thou wilt." Accordingly Ala al-Din went to the King and finding him lying drugged and helpless pinioned him fast and manacled and fettered him with chains. Then he gave him the counter-drug and he came to himself—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Primarily, being middle-aged; then aid, a patron, servant, etc. Also a tribe of the Jinn usually made synonymous with "Márid," evil controuls hostile to men: modern spiritualists would regard them as polluted souls not yet purged of their malignity. The text insinuates that they were at home amongst Christians and in Genoa.

² Arab. "Sar'a" = epilepsy, falling sickness, of old always confounded with "possession" (by evil spirits) or "obsession."

¹ Again the old charge of falsifying the “Sacred books.” Here the Koran is called “Furkán.” Sale (sect. iii) would assimilate this to the Hebr. Perek or Pirka, denoting a section or portion of Scripture; but Moslems understand it to be the “Book which distinguisheth (faraka, divided) the true from the false.” Thus Caliph Omar was entitled “Fárúk” = the Distinguisher (between right and wrong). Lastly, “Furkán,” meaning as in Syr. and Ethiop. deliverance, revelation, is applied alike to the Pentateuch and Koran.

² Euphemistic for “thou shalt die.”

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Sixty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ala al-Din gave the antidote of Bhang to King Yohanna, father of Husn Maryam, and he came to himself and found Ala al-Din and his daughter sitting on his breast. So he said to her, "O my daughter, dost thou deal thus with me?" She answered, "If I be indeed thy daughter, become a Moslem, even as I became a Moslemah; for the truth was shown to me and I attested it; and the false, and I deserted it. I have submitted myself unto Allah, The Lord of the Three Worlds, and am pure of all faiths contrary to that of Al-Islam in this world and in the next world. Wherefore, if thou wilt become a Moslem, well and good; if not, thy death were better than thy life." Ala al-Din also exhorted him to embrace the True Faith; but he refused and was contumacious; so Ala al-Din drew a dagger and cut his throat from ear to ear.¹ Then he wrote a scroll, setting forth what had happened and laid it on the brow of the dead; after which they took what was light of load and weighty of worth and turned from the palace and returned to the church. Here the Princess drew forth the jewel and, placing her hand upon the facet where was figured a couch, rubbed it; and behold, a couch appeared before her and she mounted upon it with Ala al-Din and his wife Zubaydah, the Lutist, saying, "I conjure thee by the virtue of the names and talismans and characts engraven on this jewel, rise up with us, O Couch!" And it rose with them into the air and flew, till it came a Wady wholly bare ¹ Lit. "From (jugular) vein to vein" (Arab. Warid). Our old friend Lucretius again: "Tantane religio," etc.

No. 22.

Ala al-Din Abu al-Shamat.

"She drugged a cup with Bhang, and he drank it off and fell upon his back. . . . Ala al-Din went to the King, and finding him lying drugged and helpless, pinioned him fast and manacled and fettered him with chains. . . . Then he wrote a scroll."

of growth, when the Princess turned earthwards the facet on which the couch was figured, and it sank with them to the ground. Then she turned up the face whereon was fashioned a pavilion and tapping it said, "Let a pavilion be pitched in this valley"; and there appeared a pavilion, wherein they seated themselves. Now this Wady was a desert waste, without grass or water; so she turned a third face of the jewel towards the sky, and said, "By the virtue of the names of Allah, let trees up-grow here and a river flow beside them!" And forthwith trees sprang up and by their side ran a river plashing and dashing. They made the ablution and prayed and drank of the stream; after which the Princess turned up the three other facets till she came to the fourth, whereon was portrayed a table of food, and said, "By the virtue of the names of Allah, let the table be spread!" And behold! there appeared before them a table, spread with all manner of rich meats, and they ate and drank and made merry and were full of joy. Such was their case; but as regards Husn Maryam's father, his son went in to waken him and found him slain; and seeing Ala al-Din's scroll took it and read it and readily understood it. Then he sought his sister and, finding her not, betook himself to the old woman in the church, of whom he enquired for her, but she said, "Since yesterday I have not seen her." So he returned to the troops and cried out, saying, "To horse, ye horsemen!" Then he told them what had happened, so they mounted and rode after the fugitives till they drew near the pavilion. Presently Husn Maryam arose and looked up and saw a cloud of dust which spread till it walled the view, then it lifted and flew, and lo! stood disclosed her brother and his troops, crying aloud, "Whither will ye fly, and we on your track!" Then said she to Ala al-Din, "Are thy feet firm in fight?" He replied, "Even as the stake in bran, I know not war nor battle, nor swords nor spears." So she pulled out the jewel and rubbed the fifth face, that on which were graven a horse and his rider; and behold, straightway a cavalier appeared out of the desert and ceased not to do battle with the pursuing host and smite them with the sword till he routed them and put them to flight. Then the Princess asked Ala al-Din, "Wilt thou go to Cairo or to Alexandria?" and he answered, "To Alexandria." So they mounted the couch and she pronounced over it the conjuration, whereupon it set off with them and in the twinkling of an eye, brought them to Alexandria. They alighted without the city and Ala al-Din hid the women in a cavern, whilst he went into Alexandria and fetched them outer clothing, wherewith he covered them. Then he carried them to his shop and leaving them in the "ben"¹ walked forth to fetch them the morning-meal, and behold! he met Calamity Ahmad, who chanced to be coming from Baghdad. He saw him in the street and received him with open arms, saluting him and welcoming him. Whereupon Ahmad al-Danaf gave him the good news of his son Aslan, and how he was now come to the age of twenty: and Ala al-Din, in his turn, told the Captain of the Guard all that had befallen him from first to last, wherewith he marvelled with exceeding marvel. Then he brought him to his shop and sitting-room, where they passed the night; and next day he sold his place of business and laid its price with other moneys. Now Ahmad al-Danaf had told him that the Caliph sought him; but he said, "I am bound first for Cairo, to salute my father and mother and the people of my house." So they all mounted the couch and it carried them to Cairo the God-guarded; and here they alighted in the street called Yellow,² where stood the house of Shams al-Din. Then Ala al-Din knocked at the door, and his mother said, "Who is at the door now that we have lost our beloved for evermore?" He replied, "'Tis I! Ala al-Din!" whereupon they came down and embraced him. Then he sent his wives and baggage into the house and entering himself with Ahmad al-Danaf, rested there three days, after which he was minded to set out for Baghdad. His father said, "Abide with me, O my son"; but he answered, "I cannot bear to be parted from my child Aslan." So he took his father and mother and fared forth for Baghdad. Now when they came thither, Ahmad al-Danaf went in to the Caliph and gave him the glad tidings of Ala al-Din's arrival and told him his story; whereupon the King went forth to greet him, taking the youth Aslan, and they met and embraced each other. Then the Commander of the Faithful summoned the arch-thief Ahmad Kamakin and said to Ala al-Din, "Up and at thy foe!" So he drew his sword and smote off Ahmad Kamakin's head. Then the Caliph held festival for Ala al-Din and summoning the Kazis and witnesses, wrote the contract and married him to the Princess Husn Maryam; and he went in unto her and found her an unpierced pearl. Moreover, the Caliph made Aslan Chief of the Sixty and bestowed upon him and his father sumptuous dresses of honour; and they abode in the enjoyment of all joys and joyance of life, till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Sunderer of societies. But the tales of generous men are manifold, and amongst them is the story of

¹ As opposed to the "but" or outer room.

² Arab. "Darb al-Asfar" in the old Jamaliyah or Northern part of Cairo.

HATIM OF THE TRIBE OF TAYY.

IT is told of Hátim of the tribe of Tayy,¹ that when he died, they buried him on the top of a mountain and set over his grave two troughs hewn out of two rocks and stone girls with dishevelled hair. At the foot of the hill was a stream of running water, and when wayfarers camped there, they heard loud crying and keening in the night, from dark till daybreak; but when they arose in the morning they found nothing but the girls carved in stone. Now when Zú 'l-Kurá'a,² King of Hímyar, going forth to his tribe, came to that valley, he halted to pass the night there——And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Zu 'l-Kura'a passed by the valley he nighted there; and, when he drew near the mountain, he heard the keening and said, "What lamenting is that on yonder hill?" They answered him, saying, "Verily this be the tomb of Hatim al-Táyyi, over which are two troughs of stone and stone figures of girls with dishevelled hair; and all who camp in this place by night hear this crying and keening." So he said jestingly, "O Hatim of Tayy, we are thy guests this night, and we are lank with hunger." Then sleep overcame him, but presently he awoke in affliction and cried out,

¹ A noble tribe of Badawin that migrated from Al-Yaman and settled in Al-Najd. Their Chief, who died a few years before Mohammed's birth, was Al-Hatim (the "black crow"), a model of Arab manliness and munificence; and although born in the Ignorance he will enter Heaven with the Moslems. Hatim was buried on the hill called Owárid: I have already noted this favourite practice of the wilder Arabs and the affecting idea that the Dead may still look upon his kith and kin. There is not an Arab book nor, indeed, a book upon Arabia which does not contain the name of Hatim: he is mentioned as unpleasantly often as Aristides

² Lord of "Cattle-feet," this King's name is unknown; but the Kámús mentions two Kings called Zu 'l-Kalá'a, the Greater and the Less. Lane's Shaykh (ii. 333) opined that the man who demanded Hatim's hospitality was one Abu 'l-Khaybari.

saying, "Help, O Arabs! Look to my beast!" So they came to him, and finding his she-camel struggling and struck down they stabbed her in the throat and roasted her flesh and ate. Then they asked him what had happened, and he said, "When I closed my eyes, I saw in my sleep Hatim of Tayy, who came to me sword in hand and cried:—Thou comest to us and we have nothing by us. Then he smote my she-camel with his sword, and she had surely died even though ye had not come to her and slaughtered her.¹" Now when morning dawned the King mounted the beast of one of his companions, and taking the owner up behind him, set out and fared on till mid-day, when they saw a man coming towards them, mounted on a camel and leading another, and said to him, "Who art thou?" He answered, "I am Adi,² son of Hatim of Tayy; where is Zu 'l-Kura'a, Emir of Himyar?" Replied they, "This is he"; and he said to the prince, "Take this she-camel in place of thy beast which my father slaughtered for thee." Asked Zu 'l-Kura'a, "Who told thee of this?" and Adi answered, "My father appeared to me in a dream last night, and said to me:—Harkye, Adi; Zu 'l-Kura'a, King of Himyar, sought the guest-rite of me and I, having naught to give him, slaughtered his she-camel that he might eat: so do thou carry him a she-camel to ride, for I have nothing." And Zu 'l-Kura'a took her, marvelling at the generosity of Hatim of Tayy alive and dead. And amongst instances of generosity is the

TALE OF MA'AN THE SON OF ZAIDAH.³

It is told of Ma'an bin Zaidah that, being out one day a-chasing and a-hunting, he became a-thirst, but his men had no water with

1 The camel's throat, I repeat, is not cut as in the case of other animals; the muscles being too strong: it is slaughtered by the "nahr," i.e., thrusting a knife into the hollow at the commissure of the chest. (Pilgrimage, iii. 303.)

2 Adi became a Moslem and was one of the companions of the Prophet.

3 A rival in generosity to Hatim: a Persian poet praising his patron's generosity says that it buried that of Hatim and dimmed that of Ma'an (D'Herbelot). He was a high official under the last Ommyade, Marwán al-Himár (the "Ass" or the "Century," the duration of Ommyade rule) who was routed and slain in A.H. 132 = 750. Ma'an continued to serve under the Abbasides and was a favourite with Al-Mansúr. "More generous or bountiful than Ka'ab" is another saying (A.P., i. 325); Ka'ab ibn Mámal was a man who, somewhat like Sir Philip Sidney at Zutphen, gave his own portion of them; and while thus suffering, behold! three damsels met him bearing three skins of water;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-first Night,¹

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that three girls met him, bearing three skins of water; so he begged drink of them, and they gave him to drink. Then he sought of his men somewhat to give the damsels, but they had no money; so he presented to each girl ten golden-piled arrows from his quiver. Whereupon quoth one of them to her friend, "Well-a-day! These fashions pertain to none but Ma'an bin Zaidah! so let each one of us say somewhat of verse in his praise." Then quoth the first:—

He heads his arrows with piles of gold * And while shooting his foci is his bounty doled:

Affording the wounded a means of cure, * And a sheet for the bider beneath the mould!

And quoth the second:—

A warrior showing such open hand, * His boons all friends and all foes enfold:

The piles of his arrows of or are made, * So that battle his bounty may not withhold!

And quoth the third:—

From that liberal hand on his foes he rains * Shafts aureate-headed and manifold:

Wherewith the hurt shall surgeon pay, * And for slain the shrouds round their corpses roll'd.²

And there is also told a tale of drink while he was dying of thirst to a man who looked wistfully at him, whence the saying, "Give drink to thy brother the Námiri" (A.P., i. 608). Ka'ab could not mount, so they put garments over him to scare away the wild beasts and left him in the desert to die. "Scatterer of blessings" (Náshir al-Ní'am) was a title of King Malík of Al-Yaman, son of Sharhábil, eminent for his liberality. He set up the statue in the Western Desert, inscribed "Nothing behind me," as a warning to others.

¹ Lane (ii. 352) here introduces, between nights cclxxi. and ccxc., a tale entitled in the Bresl. Edit. (iv. 134) "The Sleeper and the Waker," i.e., the sleeper awakened; and he calls it;—The Story of Abu-l-Hasan the Wag. It is interesting and founded upon historical fact; but it can hardly be introduced here without breaking the sequence of The Nights. I regret this the more as Mr. Alexander J. Cothéal of New York has most obligingly sent me an addition to the Breslau text (iv. 137) from his MS. But I hope eventually to make use of it.

² The first girl calls gold "Tibr" (pure, unalloyed metal); the second "Asjad" (gold generally); and the third "Ibriz" (virgin ore, the Greek ὀβριζον). This is a law of Arab rhetoric never to repeat the word except for a purpose, and, as the language can produce 1,200,000 (to 100,000 in English) the copiousness is somewhat painful to readers.

MA'AN SON OF ZAIDAH AND THE BADAWI.

Now Ma'an bin Zaidah went forth one day to the chase with his company, and they came upon a herd of gazelles; so they separated in pursuit and Ma'an was left alone to chase one of them. When he had made prize of it he alighted and slaughtered it; and as he was thus engaged, he espied a person¹ coming forth out of the desert on an ass. So he remounted and riding up to the new-comer saluted him and asked him, "Whence comest thou?" Quoth he, "I come from the land of Kuzá'ah, where we have had a two years' dearth; but this year it was a season of plenty and I sowed early cucumbers.² They came up before their time, so I gathered what seemed the best of them and set out to carry them to the Emir Ma'an bin Zaidah, because of his well-known beneficence and notorious munificence." Asked Ma'an, "How much dost thou hope to get of him?" and the Badawi answered, "A thousand dinars." Quoth the Emir, "What if he say this is too much?" Said the Badawi, "Then I will ask five hundred dinars." "And if he say, Too much?" "Then three hundred!" "And if he say yet, Too much?" "Then two hundred!" "And if he say yet, Too much?" "Then one hundred!" "And if he say yet, Too much?" "Then fifty!" "And if he say yet, Too much?" "Then thirty!" "And if he say still, Too much?" asked Ma'an bin Zaidah. Answered the Badawi, "I will make my ass set his four hooves in his Honour's home³ and return to my people, disappointed and empty-handed." So Ma'an laughed at him, and urged his steed till he came up with his suite and returned to his place, when he said to his chamberlain, "An there come to thee a man with cucumbers and riding on an ass, admit him to me." Presently up came the Badawi and was admitted to Ma'an's presence; but knew not the Emir for the man he had met in the desert, by reason of the gravity and majesty of his semblance and the multitude of his eunuchs and attendants, for he was seated on his chair of estate with his officers ranged in lines before him and on either side. So he saluted him and Ma'an said to him, "What bringeth thee, O brother of the Arabs?" Answered the Badawi, "I hoped in the Emir, and have brought him curly cucumbers out of season." Asked Ma'an, "And how much dost thou expect of us?" "A thousand dinars," answered the Badawi. "This is far too much," quoth Ma'an. Quoth he, "Five hundred." "Too much!" "Then three hundred." "Too much!" "Two hundred." "Too much!" "One hundred." "Too much!" "Fifty." "Too much!" At last the Badawi came down to thirty dinars; but Ma'an still replied, "Too much!" So the Badawi cried, "By Allah! the man who met me in the desert brought me bad luck! But I will not go lower than thirty dinars." The Emir laughed and said nothing; whereupon the wild Arab knew that it was he whom he had met, and said, "O my lord, except thou bring the thirty dinars, see ye, there is the ass tied ready at the door and here sits Ma'an, his Honour, at home." So Ma'an laughed till he fell on his back; and, calling his steward, said to him, "Give him a thousand dinars and five hundred and three hundred and two hundred and one hundred and fifty and thirty; and leave the ass tied up where he is." So the Arab, to his amazement, received two thousand one hundred and eighty dinars, and Allah have mercy on them both and on all generous men! And I have also heard, O auspicious King, a tale of

¹ Arab. "Shakhs" before noticed.

² Arab. "Kussá'á" = the curling cucumber; the vegetable is of the cheapest, and the poorer classes eat it as "kitchen" with bread.

³ Arab. "Haram-hu," a double entendre. Here the Badawi means his Harem, the inviolate part of the house; but afterwards he makes it mean the presence of His Honour.

THE CITY OF LABTAYT.¹

THERE was once a royal city in the land of Roum called the City of Labtayt, wherein stood a tower which was always shut. And whenever a King died and another King of the Greeks took the Kingship after him, he set on the tower a new and strong lock, till there were four-and-twenty locks upon the gate, according to the number of the Kings. After this time, there came to the throne a man who was not of the old royal house, and he had a mind to open these locks, that he might see what was within the tower. The grandees of his kingdom forbade him from this and pressed him to desist and reproved him and blamed him; but he persisted saying, "Needs must this place be opened." Then they offered him all that their hands possessed of moneys and treasures and things of price, if he would but refrain; still he would not be baulked—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Toledo? this tale was probably known to Washington Irving. The "Land of Roum" here means simply Frank land, as we are afterwards told that its name was Andalusia, the old Vandal-land, a term still applied by Arabs to the whole of the Iberian Peninsula.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the grandees offered that King all their hands possessed of moneys and treasures if he would but refrain; still he would not be baulked and said, "There is no help for it but I open this tower." So he pulled off the locks, and entering found within the tower figures of Arabs on their horses and camels, habited in turbands¹ hanging down at the ends, with swords in baldric-belts thrown over their shoulders and bearing long lances in their hands. He found there also a scroll which he greedily took and read, and these words were written therein:—"Whenas this door is opened will conquer this country a raid of the Arabs, after the likeness of the figures here depicted; wherefore beware, and again beware of opening it." Now this city was in Andalusia; and that very year Tárík ibn Ziyád conquered it, during the Caliphate of Al-Walíd son of Abd al-Malik² of the sons of Umayyah; and slew this King after the sorriest fashion and sacked the city and made prisoners of the women and boys therein and got great loot. Moreover, he found there immense treasures; amongst the rest more than an hundred and seventy crowns of pearls and jacinths and other gems of price; and he found a saloon, wherein horsemen might throw the spears, full of vessels of gold and silver, such as no description can comprise. Moreover, he found there the table of food for the Prophet of Allah, Solomon son of David (the Peace with both of them!), which is extant even now in a city of the Greeks; it is told that it was of grass-green emerald with vessels of gold and platters of jasper. Likewise he found the Psalms written in the old Ionian³ character on leaves of gold bezel'd with jewels; together with a book setting forth the properties of stones and herbs and minerals, as well as the use of characts and talismans and the canons of the art of alchemy; and he found a third volume which treated of the art of cutting and setting rubies and other precious stones and of the preparation of poisons and theriacks. There found he also a mappa mundi figuring the earth and the seas and the different cities and countrys and villages of the world; and he found a vast saloon full of hermetic powder, one drachm of which clixir would turn a thousand drachms of silver into fine gold; likewise a marvellous mirror, great and round, of mixed metals, which had been made for Solomon, son of David (on the twain be the Peace!) whercin whoso looked might see the counterfeit presentment of the seven climates of the world; and he beheld a chamber full of Brahmini¹ jacinths for which no words can suffice. So he despatched all these things to Walid bin Abd al-Malik, and the Arabs spread all over the cities of Andalusia which is one of the finest of lands. This is the end of the story of the City of Labtayt. And a tale is also told of

¹ Arab. "Amám" (plur. of Imámah) the common word for turband which I prefer to write in the old unclipt fashion. We got it through the Port. Turbante and the old French Tolliban, from the (now obsolete) Persian term Doiband=a turband or a sash.

² Sixth Omniade Caliph, A.D. 705-716; from "Tárík" we have "Gibraltar" = Jabal al-Tárík.

³ Arab "Yunán" = Ionia, applica to ancient Greece as "Roum" is to the Græco-Roman Empire.

THE CALIPH HISHAM AND THE ARAB YOUTH.

THE Caliph Hisham bin Abd al-Malik bin Marwan was hunting one day, when he sighted an antelope and pursued it with his dogs. As he was following the quarry, he saw an Arab youth pasturing sheep and said to him, "Ho boy, up and after yonder antelope, for it escapeth me!" The youth raised his head to him and replied, "O ignorant of what to the deserving is due, thou lookest on me with disdain and speakest to me with contempt; thy speaking is that of a tyrant truc and thy doing what a donkey would do." Quoth Hisham, "Woe to thee, dost thou not know me?" Rejoined the youth, "Verily thine unmannerliness hath made thee known to me, in that thou spakest to me, without beginning by the salutation."² Repeated the Caliph, "Fie upon thee! I am Hisham bin Abd al-Malik." "May Allah not favour thy dwelling-place," replied the Arab, "nor guard thine abiding place! How many are thy words and how few thy generous deeds!" Hardly had he ended speaking, when up came the troop from all sides and surrounded him as the white

¹ Arab. "Bahramáni"; prob. alluding to the well-known legend of the capture of Somanath (Somnauth) from the Hindus by Mahmud of Ghazni. In the Ajá'ib al-Hind (before quoted) the Brahmins are called Abrahamah.

² i.e. "The Peace be upon thee!"

encircleth the black of the eye, all and each saying, "The Peace be upon thee, O Commander of the Faithful!" Quoth Hisham, "Cut short this talk and seize me yonder lad." So they laid hands on him; and when he saw the multitude of Chamberlains and Wazirs and Lords of State, he was in nowise concerned and questioned not of them, but let his chin drop on his breast and looked where his feet fell, till they brought him to the Caliph,¹ when he stood before him with head bowed ground-wards and saluted him not and bespoke him not. So one of the eunuchs said to him, "O dog of the Arabs, what hindereth thy saluting the Commander of the Faithful?" The youth turned to him angrily and replied, "O packsaddle of an ass, it was the length of the way that hindered me from this and the steepness of the steps and the profuseness of my sweat." Then said Hisham (and indeed he was exceeding wroth), "O boy, verily thy days are come to their latest hour; thy hope is gone from thee and thy life is passed out of thee." He answered, "By Allah, O Hisham! verily, an my life-term be prolonged and Fate ordain not its cutting short, thy words irk me not, be they long or short." Then said the Chief Chamberlain to him, "Doth it befit thy degree, O vilest of the Arabs, to bandy words with the Commander of the Faithful?" He answered promptly, "Mayest thou meet with adversity, and may woe and wailing never leave thee! Hast thou not heard the saying of Almighty Allah?—One day every soul shall come to defend itself."² Hereupon Hisham rose, in great wrath, and said, "O headsman, bring me the head of this lad; for indeed he exceedeth in talk, such as passeth conception." So the sworder took him, and making him kneel on the carpet of blood drew his sword above him, and said to the Caliph, "O Commander of the Faithful, this thy slave is misguided and is on the way to his grave; shall I smite off his head and be quit of his blood?" "Yes," replied Hisham. He repeated his question, and the Caliph again answered in the affirmative. Then he asked leave a third time, and the youth knowing that if the Caliph assented yet once more, it would be the signal of his death, laughed till his wisdom-teeth showed; whereupon Hisham's wrath redoubled and he said to him, "O boy, meseems thou art mad; seest thou not that thou art about to depart the world? Why, then, dost thou laugh in mockery of thyself?" He replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, if a larger life-term befell me, none can hurt me, great or small; but I have bethought me of some couplets, which do thou hear, for my death cannot escape thee." Quoth Hisham, "Say on and be brief"; so the Arab repeated these couplets:—

1 i.e. in the palace when the hunt was over. The bluntness and plain-speaking of the Badawi, which caused the revelation of the Koranic chapter "Inner Apartments" (No. xlix.), have always been favourite themes with Arab tale-tellers as a contrast with citizen suavity and servility. Moreover the Badawi, besides saying what he thinks, always tells the truth (unless corrupted by commerce with foreigners); and this is a startling contrast with the townsfolk. To ride out of Damascus and have a chat with the Ruwālā is much like being suddenly transferred from amongst the trickiest of Mediterranean people to the bluff society of the Scandinavian North. And the reason why the Turk will never govern the Arab in peace is that the former is always trying to finesse and to succeed by falsehood, when the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth is the thing wanted.

2 Koran, xvi. 112.

It happed one day a hawk pounced on a bird, * A wildling sparrow driven by destiny;

And held in pounces spake the sparrow thus, * E'en as the hawk rose ready home to hie:—

"Scant flesh have I to fill the maw of thee * And for thy lordly food poor morsel I."

Then smiled the hawk in flattered vanity * And pride, so set the sparrow free to fly.

At this Hisham smiled and said, "By the truth of my kinship to the Apostle of Allah (whom Allah bless and keep!), had he spoken this speech at first and asked for aught except the Caliphate, verily I would have given it to him. Stuff his mouth with jewels,¹ O eunuch, and entreat him courteously"; so they did as he bade them and the Arab went his way. And amongst pleasant tales is that of

IBRAHIM BIN AL-MAHDI AND THE BARBER-SURGEON.

THEY relate that Ibrahim, son of Al-Mahdi,² brother of Harun al Rashid, when the Caliphate devolved to Al-Maamun, the son of his brother Harun, refused to acknowledge his nephew and betook himself to Rayy³; where he claimed the throne and abode

¹ A common and expressive way of rewarding the tongue which "spoke poetry." The jewels are often pearls

² Ibrahim Abu Ishak bin al-Mahdi, a pretender to the Caliphate, of well-known wit and a famed musician surnamed from his corpulence "Al-Tannin" = the Dragon or, according to others (Lane, ii. 336), Al-Tin = the fig. His adventurous history will be found in Ibn Khallikan, D'Herbelot, and Al-Siyuti

³ The Ragha of the Zendavesta, and Rages of the Apocrypha (Tobit, Judith, etc.), the old capital of Media Proper, and seat of government of Daylam, now a ruin some miles south of Teheran which was built out of its remains. Rayy was founded by Hoshang, the primeval king who first sawed

thus a year and eleven months and twelve days. Meanwhile his nephew, Al-Maamun, awaited his return to allegiance and his accepting a dependent position till, at last, despairing of this, he mounted with his horsemen and footmen and repaired to Rayy in quest of him. Now when the news came to Ibrahim, he found nothing for it but to flee to Baghdad and hide there, fearing for his life; and Maamun set a price of an hundred thousand gold pieces upon his head, to be paid to whoso might betray him. (Quoth Ibrahim) "When I heard of this price I feared for my head"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ibrahim continued:—Now when I heard of this price I feared for my head and knew not what to do: so I went forth my house in disguise at mid-day, knowing not whither I should go. Presently I entered a broad street which was no thoroughfare, and said in my mind, "Verily, we are Allah's, and unto Him we are returning! I have exposed my life to destruction. If I retrace my steps, I shall arouse suspicion." Then being still in disguise, I espied, at the upper end of the street, a negro-slave standing at his door; so I went up to him and said to him, "Hast thou a place where I may abide for an hour of the day?" "Yes," answered he, and opening the door admitted me into a decent house, furnished with carpets and mats and cushions of leather. Then he shut the door on me and went away; and I misdoubted me he had heard of the reward offered for me, and said to myself, "He hath gone to inform against me." But, as I sat pondering my case and boiling like cauldron over fire, behold, my host came back, accompanied by a porter loaded with bread and meat and new cooking-pots and gear, and a new jar and new gugglets and other needfuls. He made the porter set them down and, dismissing him, said to me, "I offer my life for thy ransom! I am a barber-surgeon, and I know it would disgust thee to eat with me, because of the way in which I get my livelihood¹; so do thou shift for thyself and do what thou please with these things whereon no hand hath fallen." (Quoth Ibrahim) Now I was in sore need of food so I cooked me wood, made doors and dug metal. It is called Rayy al-Mahdiyyah because Al-Mahdi held his court there; Harun al-Rashid was also born in it (A.H. 145). It is mentioned by a host of authors and names one of the Makamat of Al-Hariri.

¹ Human blood being especially impure.

a pot of meat whose like I remember not ever to have eaten; and, when I had satisfied my want he said to me, "O my lord, Allah make me thy ransom! Art thou for wine? for indeed it gladdeneth the soul and doeth away care." "I have no dislike to it," replied I, being desirous of the barber's company; so he brought me new flagons of glass which no hand had touched and a jar of excellent wine, and said to me, "Strain for thyself, to thy liking"; whereupon I cleared the wine and mixed me a most delectable draught. Then he brought me a new cup and fruits and flowers in new vessels of earthenware; after which he said to me, "Wilt thou give me leave to sit apart and drink of my own wine by myself, of my joy in thee and for thee?" "Do so," answered I. So I drank and he drank till the wine began to take effect upon us, when the barber rose and, going to a closet, took out a lute of polished wood and said to me, "O my lord, it is not for the like of me to ask the like of thee to sing, but it behoveth thine exceeding generosity to render my respect its due; so, if thou see fit to honour thy slave, thine is the high decision." Quoth I (and indeed I thought not that he knew me), "How knowest thou that I excel in song?" He replied, "Glory be to Allah, our lord is too well renowned for that! Thou art my Lord Ibrahim, son of Al-Mahdi, our Caliph of yesterday, he on whose head Al-Maamun hath set a price of an hundred thousand dinars to be paid to thy betrayer: but thou art in safety with me." (Quoth Ibrahim) When I heard him say this he was magnified in my eyes, and his loyalty and noble nature were certified to me; so I complied with his wish and took the lute and tuned it, and sang. Then I bethought me of my severance from my children and my family, and I began to say:—

Belike Who Yúsuf to his kin restored * And honoured him in gaol, a captive wight;
May grant our prayer to reunite our lots; * For Allah, Lord of Worlds, hath all of might.

When the barber heard this, exceeding joy took possession of him and he was of great good cheer (for it is said that when Ibrahim's neighbours heard him only sing out, "Ho, boy, saddle the mule!" they were filled with delight). Then, being overborne by mirth, he said to me, "O my lord, wilt thou give me leave to say what is come to my mind, albeit I am not of the folk of this craft?" I answered, "Do so; this is of thy great courtesy and kindness." So he took the lute and sang these verses:—

To our beloveds we moaned our length of night; * Quoth they, "How short the nights that us benight!"

'Tis for that sleep like hood enveils their eyes * Right soon, but from our eyes is fain of flight :
 When night falls, dread and drear to those who love, * We mourn ;
they joy to see departing light :
 Had they but dree'd the weird, the bitter dole * We dree, their beds like ours had bred them blight.

(Quoth Ibrahim) So I said to him, "By Allah, thou hast shown me a kindness, O my friend, and hast done away from me the pangs of sorrow. Let me hear more trifles of thy fashion." So he sang these couplets :—

When man keeps honour bright without a stain, * Fair sits whatever robe to robe he's fain !
 She jeered at me because so few we are ; * Quoth I :—"There's ever dearth of noble men !"
 Naught irks us we are few, while neighbour tribes * Count many ;
 neighbours oft are base-born strain :
 We are a clan which holds not Death reproach, * Which Amir and Samul¹ hold illest bane :
 Leads us our love of death to fated end ; * They hate that ending and delay would gain :
 We to our neighbours' speech aye give the lie ; But when we speak none dare give lie again.

(Quoth Ibrahim) When I heard these lines, I was filled with huge delight and marvelled with exceeding marvel. Then I slept and awoke not till past nightfall, when I washed my face, with a mind full of the high worth of this barber-surgeon and his passing courtesy ; after which I wakened him, and taking out a purse I had by me containing a number of gold pieces, threw it to him saying, "I commend thee to Allah, for I am about to go forth from thee, and pray thee to expend what is in this purse on thine requirements ; and thou shalt have an abounding reward of me when I am quit of my fear." (Quoth Ibrahim) But he returned the bag to me, saying, "O my lord, paupers like myself are of no value in thine eyes ; but how, with due respect to my own generosity, can I take a price for the boon which Fortune hath vouchsafed me of thy favour and thy visit to my poor abode ? Nay, if thou repeat thy words and throw the purse to me again I will slay myself." So I put in my sleeve² the purse whose weight was irksome to me ;—

1 Jones, Brown and Robinson.

2 Arab "Kum"; the Moslem sleeve is mostly (like his trousers) of ample dimensions, and easily converted into a kind of carpet-bag by depositing small articles in the middle and gathering up the edge in the hand. In this way carried the weight would be less irksome than hanging to the waist. The English of Queen Anne's day had regular sleeve-pockets for memoranda, etc., hence the saying to have in one's sleeve.

And Shabrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ibrahim son of Al-Mahdi continued:—So I put in my sleeve the purse whose weight was irksome to me; and turned to depart, but when I came to the house-door he said, “O my lord, of a truth this is a safer hiding-place for thee than any other, and thy keep is no burden to me; so do thou abide with me till Allah be pleased grant thee relief.” Accordingly, I turned back, saying, “On condition that thou spend of the money in this purse.” He made me think that he consented to this arrangement, and I abode with him some days in the utmost comfort; but, perceiving that he spent none of the contents of the purse, I revolted at the idea of abiding at his charge and thought it shame to be a burthen on him; so I left the house disguised in women’s apparel, donning short yellow walking-boots¹ and veil. Now as soon as I found myself in the street I was seized with excessive fear, and going to pass the bridge, behold, I came to a place sprinkled with water,² where a trooper, who had been in my service, looked at me and knowing me, cried out, saying, “This is he whom Al-Maamun wanteth.” Then he laid hold of me, but the love of sweet life lent me strength and I gave him and his horse a push which threw them down in that slippery place, so that he became an example to those who will take example; and the folk hastened to him. Meanwhile, I hurried my pace over the bridge and entered a main street, where I saw the door of a house open and a woman standing upon the threshold. So I said to her, “O my lady, have pity on me and save my life; for I am a man in fear.” Quoth she, “Enter and welcome”; and carried me into an upper dining-room, where she spread me a bed and brought me food, saying, “Calm thy fear, for not a soul shall know of thee.” As she spoke, lo, there came a loud knocking at the door; so she went and opened, and suddenly my friend, whom I had thrown down on the 1 Arab. “Khuff” worn under the “Bábúg” (a corruption of the Persian pá-push = feet-covers, papooshes, slippers). Lane, M. E., chapt. i.

2 Done in hot weather throughout the city, a dry line for camels being left in mid-street to prevent the awkward beasts slipping. The watering of the Cairo streets of late years has been excessive; they are now lines of mud in summer as well as in winter, and the effluvia from the droppings of animals have, combined with other causes, seriously deteriorated the once charming climate. The only place in Lower Egypt which has preserved the atmosphere of 1850 is Suez.

bridge, appeared with his head bound up, the blood running down upon his clothes, and without his horse. She asked, "O So-and-so, what accident hath befallen thee?" and he answered, "I made prize of the young man whom the Caliph seeketh and he escaped from me"; whereupon he told her the whole story. So she brought out tinder¹ and putting it into a piece of rag bandaged his head; after which she spread him a bed and he lay sick. Then she came up to me and said, "Methinks thou art the man in question?" "Even so," answered I, and she said, "Fear not; no harm shall befall thee," and redoubled in kindness to me. So I tarried with her three days, at the end of which time she said to me, "I am in fear for thee, lest yonder man happen upon thee and betray thee to what thou darest; so save thyself by flight." I besought her to let me stay till nightfall, and she said, "There is no harm in that." So, when the night came, I put on my woman's gear and betook me to the house of a freed woman who had once been our slave. When she saw me she wept and made a show of affliction and praised Almighty Allah for my safety. Then she went forth as if she would go to market intent on hospitable thoughts, and I fancied all was right; but, ere long, suddenly I espied Ibrahim al-Mosili² making for the house amongst his troopers and servants, and led by a woman on foot; and looking narrowly at her, behold, she was the freed-woman, the mistress of the house wherein I had taken refuge. So she delivered me into their hands, and I saw death face to face. They carried me, in my woman's attire, to Al-Maamun, who called a general council and had me brought before him. When I entered I saluted him by the title of Caliph, saying, "The Peace be upon thee, O Commander of the Faithful!" and he replied, "Allah give thee neither peace nor long life." I rejoined, "According to thy good pleasure, O Commander of the Faithful, it is for the claimant of blood-revenge³ to decree punishment or pardon; but mercy is nigher to piety; and Allah hath set thy pardon above all other pardon, even as He made my sin to excel all other sin. So, if thou punish, it is of thine equity; and if thou pardon, it is of thy bounty." And I repeated these couplets:—

My sin to thee is great, * But greater thy degree :
 So take revenge, or else * Remit in clemency :
 An I in deeds have not * Been generous, generous be !

¹ Arab. "Hurák"; burnt rag, serving as tinder for flint and steel, is a common stytic.

² Of this worthy, something has been said, and there will be more in a future page.

³ i.e. the person entitled to exact the blood-wit.

(Quoth Ibrahim) At this Al-Maamun raised his head to me and I hastened to add these two couplets :—

I've sinned enormous sin, * But pardon in thee lies ;
If pardon thou, 'tis grace ; * Justice an thou chastise !

Then Al-Maamun bowed his head and repeated :—

I am (when friend would raise a rage that mote * Make spittle choke me, sticking in my throat)

His pardoner, and pardon his offence, * Fearing lest I should live a friend without.

(Quoth Ibrahim) Now when I heard these words I scented mercy, knowing his disposition to clemency.¹ Then he turned to his son Al-Abbas and his brother Abu Ishak and all his chief officers there present and said to them, "What deem ye of his case?" They all counselled him to do me dead, but they differed as to the manner of my death. Then said he to his Wazir Ahmad bin al-Khálid, "And what sayest thou, O Ahmad?" He answered, "O Commander of the Faithful, an thou slay him, we find the like of thee who hath slain the like of him; but an thou pardon him, we find not the like of thee that hath pardoned the like of him."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Al-Maamun, Prince of the Faithful, heard the words of Ahmad bin al-Khalid, he bowed his head and began repeating :—

My tribe have slain that brother mine, Umaym, * Yet would shoot back what shafts at them I aim :

If I deal pardon, noble pardon 'tis ; * And if I shoot, my bones 'twill only maim.²

And he also recited :—

Be mild to brother mingling * What is wrong with what is right :
Kindness to him continue * Whether good or graceless wight :
Abstain from all reproaching, * An he joy or vex thy sprite :
Scest not that what thou lovest * And what hatest go unite ?

¹ Al-Maamun was a man of sense with all his fanaticism. One of his sayings is preserved, "Odious is contentiousness in kings; more odious vexation in judges uncomprehending a case; yet more odious is shallowness of doctors in religions and most odious are avarice in the rich, idleness in youth, jesting in age, and cowardice in the soldier."

² The second couplet is not in the Mac. Edit. but Lane's Shaykh has supplied it (ii. 339).

That joys of longer life-tide * Ever fade with hair turned white ?
 That thorns on branches growing * For the pluckt fruit catch thy sight ?

Who never hath done evil, * Doing good for sole delight ?
 When tried the sons of worldli- * ness they mostly work unright.

(Quoth Ibrahim) Now when I heard these couplets, I withdrew my woman's veil from my head and cried out with my loudest voice, "Allah is most Great! By Allah, the Commander of the Faithful pardoneth me!" Quoth he, "No harm shall come to thee, O uncle"; and I rejoined, "O Commander of the Faithful, my sin is too sore for me to excuse it, and thy mercy is too much for me to speak thanks for it." And I chanted these couplets to a lively motive:—

Who made all graces all collected He * In Adam's loins, our Seventh Imam, for thee¹;
 Thou hast the hearts of men with reverence filled, * Enguarding all with heart-humility;
 Rebelled I never by delusion whelmed * For object other than thy clemency²;
 And thou hast pardoned me whose like was ne'er * Pardoned before, though no man pled my plea:
 Hast pitied little ones like Katá's³ young, * And mother's yearning heart a son to see.

Quoth Maamun, "I say, following our lord Joseph (on whom and on our Prophet be blessing and peace!) let there be no reproach cast on you this day. Allah forgiveth you; for He is the most merciful of those who show mercy.⁴ Indeed I pardon thee, and restore to thee thy goods and lands, O uncle, and no harm shall befall thee." So I offered up devout prayers for him and repeated these couplets:—

1 Adam's loins, the "Day of Alast," and the Imam (who stands before the people in prayer) have been explained. The "Seventh Imam" here is Al-Maamun, the seventh Abbaside—the Omniades being, as usual, ignored.

2 He sinned only for the pleasure of being pardoned, which is poetical and hardly practical or probable.

3 The Katá (sand-grouse) always enters into Arab poetry because it is essentially a desert bird; and here the comparison is good because it lays its eggs in the waste far from water, which it must drink morning and evening. Its cry is interpreted "man sakat, salam" (silent and safe), but it does not practise that precept, for it is usually betrayed by its piping Kata! kata! Hence the proverb, "More voracious than the sand-grouse"; and "Speak not falsely, for the Kata sayeth sooth," is Komayt's saying. It is an emblem of swiftness: when the brigand-poet Shanfara boasts, "The ash-coloured Katas can drink only my leavings, after hastening all night to slake their thirst in the morning," it is a hyperbole boasting of his speed. In Sind it is called the "rock pigeon," and it is not unlike a grey partridge when on the wing.

4 Joseph to his brethren (Koran, xii. 92), when he gives them his "inner garment" to throw over his father's face.

Thou hast restored my wealth sans greed and ere * So didst, thou designèdest my blood to spare :
Then if I shed my blood and wealth, to gain * Thy grace, till even shoon from foot I tear,
'Twere but repaying what thou lentest me, * And what unloaned no man to blame would care :
Were I ungrateful for thy lavisht boons, * Baser than thou'rt beneficent
I were !

Then Al-Maamun showed me honour and favour and said to me,
"O uncle, Abu Ishak and Al-Albas counselled me to put thee to death." So I answered, "And they both counselled thee right, O Commander of the Faithful, but thou hast done after thine own nature and hast put away what I feared with what I hoped." Rejoined Al-Maamun, "O uncle, thou didst extinguish thy rancour with the modesty of thine excuse, and I have pardoned thee, without making thee drink the bitterness of obligation to intercessors." Then he prostrated himself in prayer a long while, after which he raised his head and said to me, "O uncle, knowest thou why I prostrated myself?" Answered I, "Haply thou didst this in thanksgiving to Allah, for that He hath given thee the mastery over thine enemy." He replied, "Such was not my design, but rather to thank Allah for having inspired me to pardon thee and for having cleared my mind towards thee. Now tell me thy tale." So I told him all that had befallen me with the barber, the trooper, and his wife, and with my freed-woman who had betrayed me. So he summoned the freed-woman, who was in her house, expecting the reward to be sent for her ; and when she came before him he said to her, "What moved thee to deal thus with thy lord?" Quoth she, "Lust of money." Asked the Caliph,
"Hast thou a child or a husband?" and she answered "No";
whereupon he bade them give her an hundred stripes with a whip and imprisoned her for life. Then he sent for the trooper and his wife and the barber-surgeon and asked the soldier what had moved him to do thus. "Lust of money," quoth he ; whereupon quoth the Caliph, "It befitteth thee to be a barber-cupper," and committed him to one whom he charged to place him in a barber-cupper's shop, where he might learn the craft. But he showed honour to the trooper's wife and lodged her in his palace, saying,
"This is a woman of sound sense and fit for matters of moment."
Then said he to the barber-cupper, "Verily, thou hast shown

1 Arab "Hajjâm" = a cupper who scarifies forehead and legs, a bleeder, a (blood-) sucker. The slang use of the term is to thrash, lick, wallop (Birckhardt, Prov. 34).

worth and generosity which call for extraordinary honour." So he commanded the trooper's house and all that was therein to be given him and bestowed on him a dress of honour, and in addition fifteen thousand dinars to be paid annually. And men tell the following tale concerning

THE CITY OF MANY-COLUMNED IRAM AND ABDULLAH SON OF ABI KILABAH.¹

It is related that Abdullah bin Abi Kilábah went forth in quest of a she-camel which had strayed from him; and, as he was wandering in the deserts of Al-Yaman and the district of Sabá,² behold, he came upon a great city girt by a vast castle, around which were palaces and pavilions that rose high into middle air. He made for the place thinking to find there folk of whom he might ask concerning his she-camel; but when he reached it he found it desolate, without a living soul in it. So (quoth he) I alighted and hobbling my dromedary,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abdullah bin Abi Kilabah continued:—I dismounted and hobbling my ¹ The Bres. Edit. (vii. 171-174) entitles this tale, "Story of Shaddád bin 'Ád and the City of Iram the Columned"; but it relates chiefly the building by the King of the First Adites, who, being promised a future Paradise by Prophet Húd, impiously said that he would lay out one in this world. It also quotes Ka'ab al-Ahbár as an authority for declaring that the tale is in the "Pentateuch of Moses." Iram was in Al-Yaman near Adan (our Aden) a square of ten parasangs (or leagues each=18,000 feet) every way; the walls were of red (baked) brick, 500 cubits high and 20 broad, with four gates of corresponding grandeur. It contained 300,000 Kasr (palaces), each with a thousand pillars of gold-bound jasper, etc. (whence its title). The whole was finished in five hundred years; and, when Shaddad prepared to enter it, the "Cry of Wrath" from the Angel of Death slew him and all his many. It is mentioned in the Koran (chapt. lxxxix. 6-7) as "Irem adorned with lofty buildings (or pillars)." But Ibn Khaldun declares that commentators have embroidered the passage; Iram being the name of a powerful clan of the ancient Adites and "imád" being a tent-pole; hence "Iram with the numerous tents or tent-poles." Al-Bayzawi tells the story of Abdullah ibn Kilabah (D'Herbelot's Colabah). At Aden I met an Arab who had seen the mysterious city on the borders of Al-Ahkáf, the waste of deep sands, west of Hadramaut; and probably he had the mirage or sun-reck taking its place. Compare with this tale "The City of Brass" (night dlxvi).

² The Biblical "Sheba," named from the great-grandson of Joctan; whence the Queen (Bilkis) visited Solomon. It was destroyed by the Flood of Márib.

dromedary and composing my mind entered into the city. Now when I came to the castle, I found it had two vast gates (never in the world was seen their like for size and height) inlaid with all manner jewels and jacinths, white and red, yellow and green. Beholding this I marvelled with great marvel and thought the case mighty wondrous; then entering the citadel in a flutter of fear and dazed with surprise and affright, I found it long and wide, about equalling Al-Madinah¹ in point of size; and therein were lofty palaces laid out in pavilions all built of gold and silver, and inlaid with many-coloured jewels and jacinths and chrysolites and pearls. And the door-leaves in the pavilions were like those of the castle for beauty; and their floors were strewn with great pearls and balls, no smaller than hazel-nuts, of musk and ambergris and saffron. Now when I came within the heart of the city and saw therein no created beings of the Sons of Adam I was near swooning and dying for fear. Moreover, I looked down from the great roofs of the pavilion-chambers and their balconies, and saw rivers running under them; and in the main streets were fruit-laden trees and tall palms; and the manner of their building was one brick of gold and one of silver. So I said in myself, "Doubtless this is the Paradise promised for the world to come." Then I loaded me with the jewels of its gravel and the musk of its dust as much as I could carry and returned to my own country, where I told the folk what I had seen. After a time the news reached Mu'awiyah, son of Abu Sufyán, who was then Caliph in Al-Hijaz; so he wrote to his lieutenant in San'á of Al-Yaman to send for the teller of the story and question him of the truth of the case. Accordingly the lieutenant summoned me and questioned me of my adventure and of all appertaining to it; and I told him what I had seen, whereupon he despatched me to Mu'awiyah, before whom I repeated the story of the strange sight; but he would not credit it. So I brought out to him some of the pearls and balls of musk and ambergris and saffron, in which latter there was still some sweet savour; but the pearls were grown yellow and had lost pearly colour.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The full title of the Holy City is "Madinat al-Nabi" = the City of the Prophet; of old Yasrib (Yathrib) the Iatrippa of the Greeks (Pilgrimage, ii. 119). The reader will remember that there are two "Yasribs"; that of lesser note being near Al-Hajr in the Yamámah-province.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abdullah son of Abu Kilabah continued:—But the pearls were grown yellow and had lost pearly colour. Now Mu'awiyah wondered at this, and sending for Ka'ab al-Ahbár¹ said to him, "O Ka'ab, I have sent for thee to ascertain the truth of a certain matter, and hope that thou wilt be able to certify me thereof." Asked Ka'ab, "What is it, O Commander of the Faithful?" and Mu'awiyah answered, "Wottest thou of any city founded by man which is builded of gold and silver, the pillars whereof are of chrysolite and rubies, and its gravel pearls and balls of musk and ambergris and saffron?" He replied, "Yes, O Commander of the Faithful, this is 'Iram with pillars decked and dight, the light of which was never made in the lands,' and the builder was Shaddad son of Ad the Greater." Quoth the Caliph, "Tell us something of its history," and Ka'ab said:—Ad the Greater had two sons, Shadíd and Shaddád who, when their father died, ruled conjointly in his stead, and there was no King of the Kings of the earth but was subject to them. After awhile Shadid died and his brother Shaddad reigned over the earth alone. Now he was fond of reading in antique books; and happening upon the description of the world to come and of Paradise, with its pavilions and galleries and trees and fruits and so forth, his soul moved him to build the like thereof in this world, after the fashion aforesaid. Now under his hand were an hundred thousand Kings, each ruling over an hundred thousand chiefs, commanding each an hundred thousand warriors; so he called these all before him and said to them, "I find in ancient books and annals a description of Paradise, as it is to be in the next world, and I desire to build me its like in this world. Go ye

1 "Ka'ab of the Scribes," a well-known traditionist and religious poet who died (A.H. 32) in the Caliphate of Osman. He was a Jew who islamised; hence his name (Ahbár, plur. of Hibr, a Jewish scribe, doctor of science, etc. Jarrett's El-Siyuti, p. 123). He must not be confounded with another Ka'ab al-Ahbár the Poet of the (first) Cloak-poem or "Burdah," a noble Arab who was a distant cousin of Mohammed and whose tomb at Hums (Emesa) is a place of pious visitation. According to the best authorities (no Christian being allowed to see them) the cloak given to the bard by Mohammed is still preserved together with the Khirkah or Sanjak Sherif ("Holy Coat" or Banner, the national orisflamme at Stambul in the Upper Serraglio (Pilgrimage, i. 213). Many authors repeat this story of Mu'awiyah the Caliph, and Ka'ab of the Burdah, but it is an evident anachronism, the poet having been dead nine years before the ruler's accession (A.H. 41).

2 Koran, lxxxix 6-7.

3 Arab. "Kahramán" from Pers., braves, heroes.

forth therefore to the goodliest tract on earth and the most spacious and build me there a city of gold and silver, whose gravel shall be chrysolite and rubies and pearls; and for support of its vaults make pillars of jasper. Fill it with palaces, whereon ye shall set galleries and balconies and plant its lanes and thoroughfares with all manner trees bearing yellow-ripe fruits and make rivers to run through it adown channels of gold and silver." Whereat said one and all, "How are we able to do this thing thou hast commanded, and whence shall we get the chrysolites and rubies and pearls whereof thou speakest?" Quoth he, "What! weest ye not that the Kings of the world are subject to me and under my hand, and that none therein dare gainsay my word?" Answered they, "Yes, we know that;"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the lieges answered, "Yes, we know that"; whereupon the King rejoined, "Fare ye, then, to the mines of chrysolites and rubies and pearls and gold and silver, and collect their produce and gather together all of value that is in the world, and spare no pains and leave naught; and take also for me such of these things as be in men's hands and let nothing escape you: be diligent and beware of disobedience." And thereupon he wrote letters to all the Kings of the world and bade them gather together whatso of these things was in their subjects' hands, and get them to the mines of precious stones and metals, and bring forth all that was therein, even from the abysses of theseas. This they accomplished in the space of twenty years; for the number of rulers then reigning over the earth was three hundred and sixty Kings; and Shaddad presently assembled from all lands and countries architects and engineers and men of art and labourers and handicraftsmen, who dispersed over the world and explored all the wastes and wolds and tracts and holds. At last they came to an uninhabited spot, a vast and fair open plain clear of sand-hills and mountains, with founts flushing and rivers rushing, and they said, "This is the manner of place the King commanded us to seek and ordered us to find." So they busied themselves in building the city even as bade them Shaddad, King of the whole earth, in its length and breadth; leading the fountains in channels and laying the foundations after the prescribed fashion. Moreover, all the Kings of earth's several reigns sent thither jewels and precious stones and pearls large and small and carnelian and refined gold and virgin silver upon camels by land, and in great ships over the waters, and there came to the builders' hands of all these materials so great a quantity as may neither be told nor counted nor conceived. So they laboured at the work three hundred years; and, when they had brought it to end, they went to King Shaddad and acquainted him therewith. Then said he, "Depart and make thereon an impregnable castle, rising and towering high in air, and build around it a thousand pavilions, each upon a thousand columns of chrysolite and ruby and vaulted with gold, that in each pavilion a Wazir may dwell." So they returned forthwith and did this in other twenty years; after which they again presented themselves before King Shaddad and informed him of the accomplishment of his will. Then he commanded his Wazirs, who were a thousand in number, and his Chief Officers and such of his troops and others as he put trust in, to prepare for departure and removal to Many-columned Iram, in the suite and at the stirrup of Shaddad, son of Ad, King of the world; and he bade also such as he would of his women and his Harim and of his handmaids and eunuchs make them ready for the journey. They spent twenty years in preparing for departure, at the end of which time Shaddad set out with his host,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Seventy-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Shaddad bin Ad fared forth, he and his host, rejoicing in the attainment of his desire till there remained but one day's journey between him and Iram of the Pillars. Then Allah sent down on him and on the stubborn unbelievers with him a mighty rushing sound from the Heavens of His power, which destroyed them all with its vehement clamour, and neither Shaddad nor any of his company set eyes upon the city.¹ Moreover, Allah blotted out the road which led to the city, and it stands in its stead unchanged until the Resurrection Day and the Hour of Judgment. So Mu'awiyah wondered greatly at Ka'ab al-Ahbar's story and said to him, ¹ The Deity in the East is as whimsical a despot as any of His "shadows" or "viceregents." In the text Shaddad is killed for mere jealousy—a base passion utterly unworthy of a godhead; but one to which Allah was greatly addicted.

"Hath any mortal ever made his way to that city?" He replied, "Yes; one of the companions of Mohammed (on whom be blessing and peace!) reached it, doubtless and forsure after the same fashion as this man here seated." And (quoth Al-Sha'abi¹) it is related, on the authority of learned men of Himyar in Al-Yaman that Shaddad, when destroyed with all his host by the sound, was succeeded in his Kingship by his son Shaddad the Less, whom he left viceregent in Hazramaut² and Saba, when he and his marched upon Many-columned-Iram. Now as soon as he heard of his father's death on the road, he caused his body to be brought back from the desert to Hazramaut and bade them hew him out a tomb in a cave, where he laid the body on a throne of gold and threw over the corpse threescore and ten robes of cloth of gold, purfled with precious stones. Lastly at his sire's head he set up a tablet of gold whereon were graven these verses:—

Take warning O proud,	* And in length o' life vain !
I'm Shaddád son of Ad,	* Of the forts castellain ;
Lord of pillars and power,	* Lord of tried might and main,
Whom all earth-sons obeyed	* For my mischief and bain ;
And who held East and West	* In mine awfulest reign.
He preached me salvation	* Whom God did assain, ³
But we crossed him and asked	* "Can no refuge be ta'en ?"
When a Cry on us cried	* From th' horizon plain.
And we fell on the field	* Like the harvested grain,
And the Fixt Day await	* We, in earth's bosom lain !

Al-Sa'alibi also relateth:—It chanced that two men once entered this cave and found steps at its upper end; so they descended and came to an underground chamber, an hundred cubits long by forty wide and an hundred high. In the midst stood a throne of gold, whercon lay a man of huge bulk, filling the whole length and breadth of the throne. He was covered with jewels and raiment

¹ Some traditionist ; but whether Sha'abi, Shi'abi or Shu'abi we cannot decide.

² The Hazarmaveth of Genesis (x. 26) in South Eastern Arabia. Its people are the Adramitæ (mod. Hazrami) of Ptolemy, who places in their land the Arabiæ Emporium, as Pliny does his Massola. They border upon the Homeritæ or men of Himyar, often mentioned in The Nights. Hazramaut is still practically unknown to us, despite the excursions of many travellers ; and the hard nature of the people, the Swiss of Arabia, offers peculiar obstacles to exploration.

³ i.e. the prophet Hud, generally identified (?) with Heber. He was commissioned (Koran, chapt. vii.) to preach Al-Islam to his tribe, the Adites, who worshipped four goddesses, Sákiyah (the rain-giver), Rázikah (food-giver), Háfizah (the saviouress) and Sálimah (who healed sickness. As has been seen he failed, so it was useless to send him gold-and-silver-wrought, and at his head was a tablet of gold bearing an inscription. So they took the tablet and carried it off, together with as many bars of gold and silver and so forth as they could bear away. And men also relate the tale of

ISAAC OF MOSUL.

QUOTH Isaac of Mosul¹:—I went out one night from Al-Maamun's presence on my way to my house; and, being taken with a pressing need to make water, I turned aside into a by-street and stood in the middle fearing lest something might hurt me, if I squatted against a wall.² Presently, I espied something hanging down from one of the houses; so I felt it to find out what it might be and found that it was a great four-handed basket,³ covered with brocade. Said I to myself, "There must be some reason for this," and knew not what to think; then drunkenness led me to seat myself in the basket, and behold, the people of the house pulled me up, thinking me to be the person they expected. Now when I came to the top of the wall; lo, four damsels were there, who said to me, "Descend and welcome and joy to thee!" Then one of them forewent me with a wax candle and brought me down into a mansion, wherein were furnished sitting-chambers, whose like I had never seen save in the palace of the Caliphate. So I sat me down, and after a while the curtains were suddenly drawn from one side of the room and, behold, in came damsels walking in procession and hending in hand lighted flambeaux of wax and censers full of Sumatran aloes-wood, and amongst them a young lady as she were the rising full moon. I stood up to her and she said, "Welcome to thee for a visitor!" and then she made me sit down again and asked me how I came thither. Quoth I, "I was returning home from the house of an intimate friend and went astray in the dark; then, being taken in the street with an urgent

¹ Son of Ibrahim al-Mosuli, a musician, poet, and favourite with the Caliphs Harun al-Rashid and Al-Maamun. He made his name immortal by being the first who reduced Arab harmony to systematic rules; and he wrote a biography of musicians referred to by Al-Hariri in the Séance of Singar.

² This must not be confounded with the action mentioned in 1 Kings xiv. 10, where watering against a wall denotes a man as opposed to a woman.

³ Arab "Zambil" or "Zimbil," a limp basket made of plaited palm-leaves and generally two-handed. It is used for many purposes, from carrying poultry to carrying earth.

call to make water, I turned aside into this lane, where I found a basket let down. The strong wine which I had drunk led me to seat myself in it and it was drawn up with me into this house, and this is my story." She rejoined, "No harm shall befall thee and I hope thou wilt have cause to praise the issue of thine adventure." Then she added, "But what is thy condition?" I said, "A merchant in the Baghdad bazar," and she, "Canst thou repeat any verses?" "Some small matter," quoth I. Quoth she, "Then call a few to mind and let us hear some of them." But I said, "A visitor is bashful and timid; do thou begin." "True," replied she and recited some verses of the poets, past and present, choosing their choicest pieces; and I listened, not knowing whether more to marvel at her beauty and loveliness or at the charm of her style of declamation. Then said she, "Is that bashfulness of thine gone?" And I said, "Yes, by Allah!" so she rejoined, "Then, if thou wilt, recite us somewhat." So I repeated to her a number of poems by old writers, and she applauded, saying, "By Allah, I did not think to find such culture among the trade folk, the sons of the bazar!" Then she called for food——Whereupon quoth Shahrazad's sister Dunyazad, "How pleasant is this tale and enjoyable and sweet to the ear and sound to the sense!" But she answered, "And what is this story compared with that which thou shalt hear on the morrow's night, if I be alive and the King deign spare me!" Then Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eightieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Isaac of Mosul continued:—Then the damsel called for food, and when it was served to her she fell to eating it and setting it before me; and the sitting-room was full of all manner sweet-scented flowers and rare fruits, such as are never found save in Kings' houses. Presently, she called for wine and drank a cup, after which she filled another and gave it to me, saying, "Now is the time for converse and story-telling." So I bethought myself and began to say, "It hath reached me that such and such things happened; and there was a man who said so and so," till I had told her a number of pleasing tales and adventures with which she was delighted, and cried, "'Tis marvellous that a merchant should bear in memory such store of stories like these, for they are fit for Kings." Quoth I, "I had a neighbour who used to consort with Kings and carouse with them; so when he was at leisure

I visited his house and he hath often told me what thou hast heard." Thereupon she exclaimed, "By my life, but thou hast a good memory!" So we continued to converse thus, and as often as I was silent she would begin, till in this way we passed the most part of the night, whilst the burning aloes-wood diffused its fragrance, and I was in such case that if Al-Maamun had suspected it he would have flown like a bird with longing for it. Then said she to me, "Verily, thou art one of the most pleasant of men, polished, passing well bred and polite; but there lacketh one thing." What is that?" asked I, and she answered, "If thou only knew how to sing verses to the lute!" I answered, "I was passionately fond of this art aforetime, but finding I had no taste for it I abandoned it, though at whiles my heart yearneth after it. Indeed, I should love to sing somewhat well at this moment and fulfil my night's enjoyment." Then she, "Meseemeth thou hintest a wish for the lute to be brought?" and I, "It is thine to decide, if thou wilt so far favour me, and to thee be the thanks." So she called for a lute and sang a song in a voice whose like I never heard, both for sweetness of tone and skill in playing, and perfection of art. Then said she, "Knowest thou who composed this air and whose are the words of this song?" "No," answered I; and she said, "The words are So-and-so's and the air is Isaac's." I asked, "And hath Isaac then (may I be thy sacrifice!) such a talent?" She replied, "Bravo!¹ Bravo Isaac! indeed he excelleth in this art." I rejoined, "Glory be to Allah who hath given this man what He hath vouchsafed to none other!" Then she said, "And how would it be, an thou heard this song from himself?" After such wise we went on till break of day-dawn, when there came to her an old woman, as she were her nurse, and said to her, "Verily, the time is come." So she rose in haste and said to me, "Keep what hath passed between us to thyself; for such meetings are in confidence";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the damsel whispered, "Keep what hath passed between us to thyself, for such meetings are in confidence"; and I replied, "May I be thy

¹ Here we have again the Syriac "Bakhkhū Bakhkhū" = well done! It is the Pers. Aferin, and means "all praise be to him."

ransom! I needed no charge to this." Then I took leave of her and she sent a handmaid to show me the way and open the house door; so I went forth and returned to my own place, where I prayed the morning prayer and slept. Now after a time there came to me a messenger from Al-Maamun, so I went to him and passed the day in his company. And when the night fell I called to mind my yesternight's pleasure, a thing from which none but an ignoramus would abstain, and betook myself to the street, where I found the basket, and seating myself therein was drawn up to the place in which I had passed the previous night. When the lady saw me she said, "Indeed thou hast been assiduous": and I answered, "Meseemeth rather that I am neglectful." Then we fell to discoursing and passed the night as before in general conversation and reciting verses and telling rare tales, each in turn, till daybreak, when I wended me home; and I prayed the dawn-prayer and slept. Presently there came to me a messenger from Al-Maamun; so I went to him and spent my day with him till nightfall, when the Commander of the Faithful said to me, "I conjure thee to sit here, whilst I go out for a want and come back." As soon as the Caliph was gone, and quite gone, my thoughts began to tempt and try me and calling to mind my late delight, I recked little what might befall me from the Prince of True Believers. So I sprang up and turning my back upon the sitting-room, ran to the street aforesaid, where I sat down in the basket and was drawn up as before. When the lady saw me she said, "I begin to think thou art a sincere friend to us." Quoth I, "Yea, by Allah!" and quoth she, "Hast thou made our house thine abiding-place?" I replied, "May I be thy ransom! A guest claimeth guest-right for three days, and if I return after this ye are free to spill my blood." Then we passed the night as before; and when the time of departure drew near, I bethought me that Al-Maamun would assuredly question me nor would ever be content save with a full explanation: so I said to her, "I see thee to be of those who delight in singing. Now I have a cousin, the son of my father's brother, who is fairer than I in face and higher of rank and better of breeding; and he is the most intimate of Allah's creatures with Isaac." Quoth she, "Art thou a parasite¹ and an importunate one?" Quoth I, "It is for thee to decide in this matter"; and she, "If thy cousin be as thou hast described him, it would not mislike us to make acquaintance with him." Then, as the time was come, I left her and returned to my house; but hardly had I reached it, ere the Caliph's runners came down on me and carried me before him by main force and roughly enough.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "A Tufayli?" So the Arab Prov (ii. 838) "More intrusive than Tufayl" (prob. the P N of a notorious spunger) The Badawin call "Wárish" a man who sits down to meat unbidden and to drink Wághil, but townsfolk apply the latter to the "Wárish."

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Isaac of Mosul continued:—And hardly had I reached my house ere the Caliph's runners came down upon me and carried me before him by main force and roughly enough. I found him seated on a chair, wroth with me, and he said to me, "O Isaac, art thou a traitor to thine allegiance?" replied I, "No, by Allah, O Commander of the Faithful!" and he rejoined, "What hast thou then to say? tell me the whole truth"; and I, "Yes, I will, but in private." So he signed to his attendants, who withdrew to a distance, and I told him the case, adding, "I promised her to bring thee," and he said, "Thou didst well." Then we spent the day in our usual pleasures, but Al-Maamun's heart was taken up with her, and hardly was the appointed time come when we set out. As we went along, I cautioned him, saying, "Look that thou call me not by my name before her; and I will demean myself like thine attendant." And having agreed upon this, we fared forth till we came to the place, where we found two baskets hanging ready. So we sat down in them and were drawn up to the usual place, where the damsel came forward and saluted us. Now when Al-Maamun saw her, he was amazed at her beauty and loveliness; and she began to entertain him with stories and verses. Presently, she called for wine and we fell to drinking, she paying him special attention and he repaying her in kind. Then she took the lute and sang these verses:—

My lover came in at the close of night, * Till he sat I rose and remained upright
And said "Sweetheart, hast thou come this hour? * Nor feared on the watch and ward to 'light": Quoth he, "The lover had cause to fear, * But Love deprived him of wits and fright."

And when she ended her song she said to me, "And is thy cousin also a merchant?" I answered, "Yes"; and she said, "Indeed, ye resemble each other nearly." But when Al-Maamun had drunk three pints,¹ he grew merry with wine and called out, saying, "Ho, Isaac!" And I replied, "Labbayk', Adsum, O Commander of the Faithful," whereupon quoth he, "Sing me this air." Now when the young lady learned that he was the Caliph, she withdrew to another place and disappeared; and as I had made an end of my song, Al-Maamun said to me, "See who is the master of this house"; whereupon an old woman hastened to make answer, saying, "It belongs to Hasan bin Sahl."² "Fetch him to me," said the Caliph. So she went away, and after a while, behold, in came Hasan, to whom said Al-Maamun, "Hast thou a daughter?" He said, "Yes, and her name is Khadijah." Asked the Caliph, "Is she married?" Answered Hasan, "No, by Allah!" Said Al-Maamun, "Then I ask her of thee in marriage." Replied her father, "O Commander of the Faithful, she is thy handmaid and at thy commandment." Quoth Al-Maamun, "I take her to wife at a present settlement of thirty thousand dinars, which thou shalt receive this very morning; and, when the money has been paid thee, do thou bring her to us this night." And Hasan answered, "I hear and I obey." Thereupon we went forth and the Caliph said to me, "O Isaac, tell this story to no one." So I kept it secret till Al-Maamun's death. Surely never did man's life gather such pleasures as were mine these four days' time, whenas I companied with Al-Maamun by day and Khadijah by night; and, by Allah, never saw I among men the like of Al-Maamun nor among women have I ever set eyes on the like of Khadijah; no, nor on any that came near her in lively wit and pleasant speech! And Allah is All-knowing. But amongst stories is that of

THE SWEEP AND THE NOBLE LADY.

DURING the season of the Meccan pilgrimage, whilst the people were making circuit about the Holy House and the place of com-

¹ Arab. "Artál" = rotoli, pounds; and A pint is a pound

All the world round;

except in highly civilised lands, where the pint has a curious power of shrinking.

² One of Al-Maamun's Wazirs. The Caliph married his daughter whose true name was Búráu; but this tale of girl's freak and courtship was invented (?) by Ishak. For the splendour of the wedding and the munificence of the Minister, see Lane, ii. 350-352.

passing was crowded, behold, a man laid hold of the covering of the Ka'abah¹ and cried out from the bottom of his heart, saying, "I beseech thee, O Allah, that she may once again be wroth with her husband and that I may know her!" A company of the pilgrims heard him and seized him and carried him to the Emir of the pilgrims after a sufficiency of blows; and, said they, "O Emir, we found this fellow in the Holy Places saying thus and thus." So the Emir commanded to hang him; but he cried, "O Emir, I conjure thee, by the virtue of the Apostle (whom Allah bless and preserve!) hear my story and then do with me as thou wilt." Quoth the Emir, "Tell thy tale forthright." Know, then, O Emir, quoth the man, that I am a sweep who works in the sheep-slaughterhouses and carries off the blood and the offal to the rubbish heaps outside the gates. And it came to pass, as I went along one day with my ass loaded, I saw the people running away, and one of them said to me, "Enter this alley lest haply they slay thee." Quoth I, "What aileth the folk running away?" and one of the eunuchs, who were passing, said to me, "This is the Harim² of one of the notables, and her eunuchs drive the people out of her way and beat them all, without respect to persons." So I turned aside with the donkey—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the man:—So I turned aside with the donkey and stood still awaiting the dispersal of the crowd; and I saw a number of eunuchs with staves in their hands, followed by nigh thirty women-slaves, and amongst them a lady as she were a willow-wand or a thirsty gazelle, perfect in beauty and grace and amorous languor, and all were attending upon her. Now when she came to the mouth of the passage where I stood, she turned right and left and calling one of the Castratos whispered in his ear; and behold, he came up to me and laid hold of me, whilst another eunuch took my ass and made off with it. And when the spectators fled, the first eunuch bound me with a rope and dragged me after him till I knew not what to do; and the people followed us and cried out, saying, "This is not allowed of Allah! What hath this poor scavenger done that he should be bound with ropes?" and praying the eunuchs, "Have pity on him and let him go, so Allah have pity on you!" And I the while said in my mind, "Doubtless the eunuchry seized me, because their mistress smelt the stink of the offal and it sickened her. Belike she is with child or ailing; but there is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" So I continued walking on behind them, till they stopped at the door of a great house; and entering before me brought me into a big hall—I know not how I shall describe its magnificence—furnished with the finest furniture. And the women also entered the hall; and I bound and held by the eunuch and saying to himself, "Doubtless they will torture me here till I die and none know of my death." However, after a while they carried me into a neat bath-room leading out of the hall; and as I sat there, behold, in came three slave-girls who seated themselves round me and said to me, "Strip off thy rags and tatters." So I pulled off my threadbare clothes and one of them fell a-rubbing my legs and feet, whilst another scrubbed my head, and a third shampooed my body. When they had made an end of washing me, they brought me a parcel of clothes and said to me, "Put these on"; and I answered, "By Allah, I know not how!" So they came up to me and dressed me, laughing together at me the while: after which they brought casting-bottles full of rose-water and sprinkled me therewith. Then I went out with them into another saloon; by Allah, I know not how to praise its splendour for the wealth of paintings and furniture therein; and entering it I saw a person seated on a couch of Indian rattan,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ I have described this scene, the wretch clinging to the curtain and sighing and crying as if his heart would break (Pilgrimage, iii. 216 and 220). The same is done at the place Al-Multazam, "the attached to"; (ibid. 156) and various spots called Al-Mustajáb, "where prayer is granted" (ibid. 162). At Jerusalem the "Wailing place of the Jews" shows queer sights: the worshippers embrace the wall with a peculiar wriggle, crying out in Hebrew: "O build Thy House, soon, without delay," etc.

² i.e., the wife. The scene in the text was common at Cairo twenty years ago; and no one complained of the stick (see Pilgrimage, i. 120).

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the sweep continued:—When I entered that saloon I saw a person seated on a couch of Indian rattan with ivory feet, and before her a number of damsels. When she saw me she rose to me and called me; so I went up to her and she seated me by her side. Then she bade her slave-girls bring food, and they brought all manner of rich meats, such as I never saw in all my life; I do not even know the names of the dishes, much less their nature. So I ate my fill, and when the dishes had been taken away and we had washed our hands, she called for fruits which came without stay or delay and ordered me eat of them; and when we had ended eating she bade one of the waiting-women bring the wine furniture. So they set on flagons of divers kinds of wine and burned perfumes in all the censers, what while a damsel like the moon rose and served us with wine to the sound of the smitten strings; and I drank, and the lady drank, till we were seized with wine, and the whole time I doubted not but that all this was an illusion of sleep. Presently, she signed to one of the damsels to spread us a bed in such a place, which being done she rose and took me by the hand and led me thither, and lay down and I lay with her till the morning, and as often as I pressed her to my breast I smelt the delicious fragrance of musk and other perfumes that exhaled from her, and could not think otherwise but that I was in Paradise or in the vain phantasies of a dream. Now when it was day, she asked me where I lodged and I told her, "In such a place"; whereupon she gave me leave to depart, handing to me a kerchief worked with gold and silver and containing somewhat tied in it, and took leave of me, saying, "Go to the bath with this." I rejoiced and said to myself, "If there be but five coppers here, it will buy me this day my morning meal." Then I left her, as though I were leaving Paradise, and returned to my poor crib where I opened the kerchief and found in it fifty miskals of gold. So I buried them in the ground and buying two farthings' worth of bread and "kitchen"¹ seated me at the door and broke my fast: after which I sat pondering my case and continued so doing till the time of afternoon-prayer, when lo! a slave-girl accosted me, saying, "My mistress calleth for thee." I followed her to the house aforesaid and, after asking permission, she carried me into the lady, before whom I kissed ground, and she commanded me to sit and called for meat and wine as on the previous day; after which I again lay with her all night. On the morrow she gave me a second kerchief, with other fifty dinars therein, and I took it and going home buried this also. In such pleasant condition I continued eight successive days, going in to her at the hour of afternoon-prayer, and leaving her at daybreak; but on the eighth night, as I lay with her, behold, one of her slave-girls came running in and said to me, "Arise, go up into yonder closet." So I rose and went into the closet which was over the gate, and presently I heard a great clamour and tramp of horse; so, looking out of the window which gave on the street in front of the house, I saw a young man as he were the rising moon on the night of fulness come riding up attended by a number of servants and soldiers who were about him on foot. He alighted at the door and entering the saloon found the lady seated on the couch; so he kissed ground between her hands, then came up to her and kissed her hands; but she would not speak to him. However, he continued patiently to humble himself, and soothe her and speak her fair, till he made his peace with her, and they lay together that night;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Udm, Udum" (plur. of Idám) = "relish," olives, cheese, pickled cucumbers, etc.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the scavenger continued:—Now when her husband had made his peace with the young lady, he lay with her that night; and next morning, the soldiers came for him and he mounted and rode away; whereupon she drew near to me and said, "Sawst thou yonder man?" I answered, "Yes"; and she said, "He is my husband, and I will tell thee what befell me with him. It came to pass one day that we were sitting, he and I, in the garden within the house, and behold, he rose from my side and was absent a long while, till I grew tired of waiting and said to myself:—Most like, he is in the privy. Accordingly, I arose and went to the water-closet, but not finding him there, went down to the kitchen, where I saw a slave-girl; and when I enquired for him, she showed him to me lying with one of the cook-maids. Hereupon, I swore a great oath that I assuredly would do adultery with the foulest and filthiest man in Baghdad; and the day the eunuch laid hands on thee, I had been four days going round about the city in quest of one who should answer to this description, but found none fouler nor filthier than thy good self. So I took thee and there passed between us that which Allah fore-ordained to us; and now I am quit of my oath." Then she added, "If, however, my husband return yet again to the cook-maid and lie with her, I will restore thee to thy lost place in my favours." Now when I heard these words from her lips, what while she pierced my heart with the shafts of her glances, my tears streamed forth, till my eyelids were chafed with weeping, and I repeated the saying of the poet:—

Grant me to kiss that fair left hand ten times; * And know it hath than right hand higher grade¹;

For 'tis but little since that fair left hand * Washed off Sir Reverence when ablution made.

Then she made them give me other fifty dinars (making in all four hundred gold pieces I had of her) and bade me depart. So I went out from her and came hither, that I might pray Allah (extolled and exalted be He!) to make her husband return to the cook-maid, that haply I might be again admitted to her favours. When the Emir of the pilgrims heard the man's story, he set him free and said to the bystanders, "Allah upon you, pray for him, for indeed he is excusable." And men also tell the tale of

THE MOCK CALIPH.²

It is related that the Caliph Harun al-Rashid was one night restless with extreme restlessness, so he summoned his Wazir Ja'afar the Barmecide, and said to him, "My breast is straitened and I have a desire to divert myself to-night by walking about the streets of Baghdad and looking into folks' affairs; but with this precaution that we disguise ourselves in merchants' gear, so none shall know us." He answered, "Hearkening and obedience." They rose at once, and doffing the rich raiment they wore, donned merchants' habits and sallied forth three in number, the Caliph, Ja'afar, and Masrur the sworder. Then they walked from place to place, till they came to the Tigris and saw an old man sitting in a boat; so they went up to him and saluting him, said, "O Shaykh, we desire thee of thy kindness and favour to carry us a-pleasuring down the river, in this thy boat, and take this dinar to thy hire"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when they said to the old man, "We desire thee to carry us a-pleasuring in this thy boat and take this dinar "; he answered, "Who may go a-pleasuring on the Tigris? The Caliph Harun al-Rashid every night cometh down Tigris-stream in his state-barge¹ and with him one crying aloud:—Ho, ye people all, great and small, gentle and simple, men and boys, whoso is found in a boat on the Tigris by night, I will strike off his head or hang him to the mast of his craft! And ye had well-nigh met him; for here cometh his carrack." But the Caliph and Ja'afar said, "O Shaykh, take these two dinars, and run us under one of yonder arches, that we may hide there till the Caliph's barge have passed." The old man replied, "Hand over your gold and rely we on Allah the Almighty!" So he took the two dinars and embarked them in the boat; and he put off and rowed about with them awhile, when behold, the barge came down the river in mid-stream, with lighted flambeaux and cressets flaming therein. Quoth the old man, "Did not I tell you that the Caliph passed along the river every night?" and ceased not muttering, "O Protector, remove not the veils of Thy protection!" Then he ran the boat under an arch and threw a piece of black cloth over the Caliph and his companions, who looked out from under the covering and saw, in the bows of the barge, a man holding in hand a cresset of red gold which he fed with Sumatran lign-aloes and the figure was clad in a robe of red satin, with a narrow turband of Mosul shape round on his head; and over one of his shoulders hung a sleeved cloak² of cramoisy satin, and on the other was a green silk bag full of the aloes-wood, wherewith he fed the cresset by way of firewood. And they sighted in the stern another man, clad like the first and bearing a like cresset, and in the barge were two hundred white slaves, standing ranged to the right and left; and in the middle a throne of red gold, whereon sat a handsome young man, like the moon, clad in a dress of black embroidered with yellow gold. Before him they beheld a man, as he were the Wazir Ja'afar, and at his head stood an eunuch, as he were Masrur, with a drawn sword in his hand; besides a score of cup-companions. Now when the Caliph saw this, he turned and said, "O Ja'afar," and the Minister replied, "At thy service, O Prince of True Believers." Then quoth the Caliph, "Belike this is one of my sons, Al-Amín or Al-Maamun." Then he examined the young man who sat on the throne, and finding him perfect in beauty and loveliness and stature and symmetric grace, said to Ja'afar, "Verily this young man abateth nor jot nor tittle of the state of the Caliphate! See, there standeth before him one as he were thyself, O Ja'afar; yonder eunuch who standeth at his head is as he were Masrur and those courtiers as they were my own. By Allah, O Ja'afar, my reason is confounded and I am filled with amazement at this matter!"—— And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ I have noticed how the left hand is used in the East.

² Gauttier makes the name of the False Caliph "Ali Shar."

¹ Arab. "Harrák," whence probably our "Carack" and "Carrack" (large ship), in dictionaries derived from Carrus Marinus.

² Arab. "Gháshiyah" = lit. an étui, a cover; and often a saddle-cover carried by the groom.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Caliph saw this spectacle his reason was confounded and he cried, "By Allah, I am filled with amazement at this matter!" and Ja'afar replied, "And I also, by Allah, O Commander of the Faithful." Then the barge passed on and disappeared from sight; whereupon the boatman pushed out again into the stream, saying, "Praised be Allah for safety, since none hath fallen in with us!" Quoth the Caliph, "O, old man, doth the Caliph come down the Tigris-river every night?" The boatman answered, "Yes, O my lord; and on such wise hath he done every night this year past." "O Shaykh," rejoined Al-Rashid, "we wish thee of thy favour to await us here to-morrow night and we will give thee five golden dinars, for we are stranger folk, lodging in the quarter Al-Khandak, and we have a mind to divert ourselves." Said the oldster, "With joy and good will!" Then the Caliph and Ja'afar and Masrur left the boatman and returned to the palace, where they doffed their merchants' habits and, donning their apparel of state, sat down each in his several stead: and came the Emirs and Wazirs and Chamberlains and Officers; and the Diwan assembled and was crowded as of custom. But when day ended and all the folk had dispersed and wended each his own way, the Caliph said to his Wazir, "Rise, O Ja'afar, let us go and solace ourselves by looking on the second Caliph." At this, Ja'afar and Masrur laughed, and the three, donning merchants' habits, went forth by a secret postern and made their way through the city, in great glee, till they came to the Tigris, where they found the greybeard sitting and awaiting them. They embarked with him in the boat, and hardly had they sat down before up came the mock Caliph's barge; and when they looked at it attentively they saw therein two hundred Mamelukes other than those of the previous night, while the link-bearers cried aloud as of wont. Quoth the Caliph,

"O Wazir, had I heard tell of this, I had not believed it; but I have seen it with my own sight." Then said he to the boatman, "Take, O Shaykh, these ten dinars and row us along abreast of them, for they are in the light and we are in the shade, so we can see them and amuse ourselves by looking on them, but they cannot see us." The man took the money and pushing off ran abreast of them in the shadow of the barge,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King that the Caliph Harun al-Rashid said to the old man, "Take these ten dinars and row us abreast of them"; to which he replied, "I hear and I obey." And he fared with them and ceased not going in the blackness of the barge, till they came amongst the gardens that lay alongside of them and sighted a large walled enclosure; and presently the barge cast anchor before a postern door, where they saw servants standing with a she-mule saddled and bridled. Here the mock Caliph landed and, mounting the mule, rode away with his courtiers and his cup-companions preceded by the cresset-bearers crying aloud, and followed by his household which busied itself in his service. Then Harun al-Rashid, Ja'afar, and Masrur landed also, and making their way through the press of servants walked on before them. Presently the cresset-bearers espied them and seeing three persons in merchants' habits, and strangers to the country, took offence at them; so they pointed them out and brought them before the other Caliph, who looked at them and asked, "How came ye to this place and who brought you at this tide?" They answered, "O our lord, we are foreign merchants and far from our homes, who arrived here this day and were out a-walking to-night, and behold, ye came up and these men laid hands on us and brought us to thy presence; and this is all our story." Quoth the mock Caliph, "Since ye be stranger folk no harm shall befall you; but had ye been of Baghdad, I had struck off your heads." Then he turned to his Wazir and said to him, "Take these men with thee; for they are our guests to-night." "To hear is to obey, O our lord," answered he; and they companied him till they came to a lofty and splendid palace set upon the firmest base; no Sultan possesseth such a place rising from the dusty mould and upon the marges of the clouds laying hold. Its door was of Indian teak-wood inlaid with gold that glowed; and through it one passed into a royal-hall in whose midst was a jetting fount girt by a raised estrade. It was provided with carpets and cushions of brocade and small pillows and long settees and hanging curtains; it was furnished with a splendour that dazed the mind and dumb'd the tongue, and upon the door were written these two couplets:—

A Palace whereon be blessings and praise! • Which with all their beauty have robed the Days:

Where marvels and miracle-sights abound, • And to write its honours the pen affrays.

The false Caliph entered with his company, and sat down on a throne of gold set with jewels and covered with a prayer-carpet of yellow silk: whilst the boon-companions took their seats and the sword-bearer of high works stood before him. Then the tables were laid and they ate; after which the dishes were removed and they washed their hands and the wine-service was set on with flagons and bowls in due order. The cup went round till it came to the Caliph, Harun al-Rashid, who refused the draught, and the mock Caliph said to Ja'afar, "What mattereth thy friend that he drinketh not?" He replied, "O my lord, indeed 'tis a long while he hath drunk naught of this." Quoth the sham Caliph, "I have drink other than this, a kind of apple-wine,¹ that will suit thy companion." So he bade them bring the cider, which they did forthright, when the false Caliph, coming up to Harun al-Rashid, said to him, "As often as it cometh to thy turn drink thou of this." Then they continued to drink and make merry and pass the cup till the wine rose to their brains and mastered their wits;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Eighty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the false Caliph and his co-sitters sat at their cups and gave not over drinking till the wine rose to their brains and mastered their wits; and Harun al-Rashid said to the Minister, "O Ja'afar, by Allah, we have no such vessels as these. Would to Heaven I knew what manner of man this youth is!" But while they were talking privily the young man cast a glance upon them, and seeing the Wazir whisper the Caliph said, "'Tis rude to whisper." He replied, "No rudeness was meant; this my friend did but say to me:—Verily I have travelled in most countries and have caroused with the greatest of Kings and I have companied with noble captains; yet never saw I a goodlier ordering than this entertainment nor passed a more delightful night; save that the people of Baghdad are wont to say, Wine without music often leaves you sick." When the second Caliph heard this, he smiled pleasantly and struck with a rod he had in his hand a round gong¹; and behold, a door opened and out came a eunuch, bearing a chair of ivory, inlaid with gold glittering fiery red and followed by a damsel of passing beauty and loveliness, symmetry and grace. He set down the chair and the damsel seated herself on it, as she were the sun shining sheen in a sky serene. In her hand she had a lute of Hindu make, which she laid in her lap and bent down over it as a mother bendeth over her little one, and sang to it, after a prelude in four-and-twenty modes, amazing all wits. Then she returned to the first mode and to a lively measure chanted these couplets:—

¹ Arab. "Sharáb al tuffáh" = melapio, or cider.

Love's tongue within my heart speaks plain to thee, • Telling thee clearly I am fain of thee; Witness the fevers of a tortured heart, • And ulcered eyelid tear-flood rains for thee;
God's fate o'ertaketh all created things! • I knew not love till learnt Love's pain of thee.

Now when the mock Caliph heard these lines sung by the damsel, he cried with a great cry and rent his raiment to the very skirt, whereupon they let down a curtain over him and brought him a fresh robe, handsomer than the first. He put it on and sat as before, till the cup came round to him, when he struck the gong a second time and lo! a door opened and out of it came a eunuch with a chair of gold, followed by a damsel fairer than the first, bearing a lute, such as would strike the envious mute. She sat down on the chair and sang to her instrument these two couplets:—

How patient bide, with love in sprite of me, • And tears in tempest² blinding sight of me?

¹ Arab. "Mudawwarah," which generally means a small round cushion, of the Morocco-work well known in England. But one does not strike a cushion for a signal; so we must revert to the original sense of the word "something round," as a circular plate of wood or metal, a gong, a "bell" like that of the Eastern Christians.

² Arab. "Túfán" (from the root Tauf=going round) a storm, a circular gale, a cyclone; the term universally applied in Al-Islam to the "Deluge,"

By Allah, life has no delight of me! * How gladden heart whose core is blight of me?

No sooner had the youth heard this poetry than he cried out with a loud cry and rent his raiment to the skirt; whereupon they let down the curtain over him and brought him another suit of clothes.
He put it on and, sitting up as before, fell again to cheerful talk, till the cup came round to him, when he smote once more upon the gong and out came a eunuch with a chair, followed by a damsel fairer than she who forwent her. Anon she sat down on a chair, with a lute in her hand, and sang thereto these couplets:—

Cease ye this farness; 'bate this pride of you, * To whom my heart clings, by life-tide of you!

Have ruth on hapless mourning, lover-wretch, * Desire-full, pining, passion-tried of you:

Sickness hath wasted him, whose ecstasy * Prays Heaven it may be satisfied of you:

Oh fullest moons¹ that dwell in deepest heart! * How can I think of aught by side of you?

Now when the young man heard these couplets, he cried out with a great cry and rent his raiment, whereupon they let fall the curtain over him and brought him other robes. Then he returned to his former case with his boon-companions and the bowl went round as before, till the cup came to him, when he struck the gong a fourth time, and the door opening, out came a page-boy bearing a chair followed by a damsel. He set the chair for her and she sat down thereon, and taking the lute, tuned it and sang to it these couplets:—

When shall disunion and estrangement end? * When shall my bygone joys again be kened?

Yesterday we were joined in same abode; * Conversing heedless of each envious friend²:

the "Flood" of Noah. The word is purely Arabic; with a quaint likeness to the Gr. τυφών, in Pliny typhon, whirlwind, a giant (Typhæus), whence "Typhon" applied to the great Egyptian god "Sét." The Arab word extended to China and was given to the hurricanes which the people call "Tae-foong," great winds, a second whimsical resemblance. But Sir John Davis (ii. 383) is hardly correct when he says, "the name typhoon, in itself a corruption of the Chinese term, bears a singular 'though we must suppose an accidental' resemblance to the Greek τυφών."

1 Plurale majestatis acting superlative; not as Lane supposes (ii. 224) "a number of full moons, not only one." Eastern tongues abound in instances, beginning with Genesis (i. 1), "Gods (he) created the heaven," etc. It is still preserved in Badawi language, and a wildling, greatly to the astonishment of the citizens, will address his friend, "Yá Rijál" = O men!

2 Arab. "Hásid" = an envier; in the fourth couplet, "Azúl" (Azzál, etc.)
= a chider, blamer; elsewhere "Lawwám" = accuser, censor, slanderer;
"Wáshí" = whisperer, informer; "Rakib" = spying, envious rival; "Ghábit"
= one emulous without envy; and "Shámit" = a "blue" (fierce) enemy

Trickt us that traitor Time, disjoined our lot * And our waste home to desert fate condemned :

Wouldst have me, Grumbler ! from my dearling fly ? * I find my vitals blame will not perpend :

Cease thou to censure ; leave me to repine ; * My mind e'er findeth thoughts that pleasure lend.

O Lords¹ of me who brake our troth and plight, * Deem not to lose your hold of heart and sprite !

When the false Caliph heard the girl's song, he cried out with a loud outcry and rent his raiment—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninetieth Night,

She said, When the false Caliph heard the girl's song, he cried with a loud outcry and rent his raiment and fell to the ground fainting ; whereupon they would have let down the curtain over him, as of custom ; but its cords stuck fast, and Harun al-Rashid, after considering him carefully, saw on his body the marks of beating with palm-rods, and said to Ja'afar, "By Allah, he is a handsome youth, but a foul thief !" "Whence knowest thou that, O Commander of the Faithful ?" asked Ja'afar ; and the Caliph answered, "Sawest thou not the whip-scars on his ribs ?"
Then they let fall the curtain over him and brought him a fresh dress, which he put on, and sat up as before with his courtiers and cup-companions. Presently he saw the Caliph and Ja'afar whispering together and said to them, "What is the matter, fair sirs ?" Quoth Ja'afar, "O my lord, all is well," save that this my comrade, who (as is not unknown to thee) is of the merchant-company, and hath visited all the great cities and countries of the world, and hath consorted with kings and men of highest consideration, saith to me :—Verily, that which our lord the Caliph hath done this night is beyond measure extravagant, never saw I any do the like doings in any country ; for he hath rent such and such dresses, each worth a thousand dinars, and this is surely excessive unthriftiness." Replied the second Caliph, "Ho, thou ! the money is my money and the stuff my stuff, and this is by way of largesse to my suite and servants ; who rejoices over another's calamities. Arabic literature abounds in allusions to this unpleasant category of "damned ill-natured friends"; and Spanish and Portuguese letters, including Brazilian, have thoroughly caught the trick.

In the Eastern mind the "blamer" would be aided by the "evil eye."

¹ Another plural for a singular, "O my beloved !"

² Arab. "Khayr" = good news, a euphemistic reply even if the tidings be of the worst.

for each suit that is rent belongs to one of my cup-companions here present, and I assign to them with each suit of clothes the sum of five hundred dinars." The Wazir Ja'afar replied, "Well is whatso thou doest, O our lord," and recited these two couplets:—

Virtue in hand of thee hath built a house, * And to mankind thou dost thy wealth expose :

If an the Virtues ever close their doors, * That hand would be a key the lock to unclose.

Now when the young man heard these verses recited by the Minister Ja'afar, he ordered him to be gifted with a thousand dinars and a dress of honour. Then the cup went round among them and the wine was sweet to them ; but after a while quoth the Caliph to Ja'afar, " Ask him of the marks on his sides, that we may see what he will say by way of reply." Answered Ja'afar, " Softly, O my lord, be not hasty and soothe thy mind, for patience is more becoming." Rejoined the Caliph, " By the life of my head and by the revered tomb of Al-Abbas,¹ except thou ask him I will assuredly stop thy breath!" With this the young man turned towards the Minister and said to him, " What aileth thee and thy friend to be whispering together? Tell me what is the matter with you." " It is nothing save good," replied Ja'afar; but the mock Caliph rejoined, " I conjure thee, by Allah, tell me what aileth you and hide from me nothing of your case." Answered the Wazir, " O my lord, verily this one here saw on thy sides the marks of beating with whips and palm-fronds, and marvelled thereat with exceeding marvel, saying :—How came the Caliph to be beaten? and he would fain know the cause of this." Now when the youth heard this, he smiled and said, " Know ye that my story is wondrous and my case marvellous ; were it graven with needles on the eye-corners, it would serve as a warner to whoso would be warned." And he sighed and repeated these couplets:—

Strange is my story, passing prodigy ; * By Love I swear, my ways wax strait on me !

An ye desire to hear me, listen, and * In this assembly let all silent be.

Heed ye my words which are of meaning deep, * Nor lies my speech ;
'tis truest verity.

¹ Abbás (from 'Abás, being austere ; and meaning the "grim-faced") son of Abd al-Muttalib ; uncle to Mohammed and eponym of the Abbaside Khalifahs. A.D. 749=1258.

I'm slain¹ by longing and by ardent love; * My slayer's the pearl of fair virginity.
She hath a jet black eye like Hindi blade, * And bowèd eyebrows shoot her archery;
My heart assures me our Imam is here, * This age's Caliph, old nobility:
Your second Ja'afar hight, is his Wazir; * A Sâhib,² Sahib-son of high degree:
The third is called Masrûr who wields the sword: * Now, if in words of mine some truth you see,
I have won every wish by this event * Which fills my heart with joy and gladdest gree.

When they heard these words Ja'afar swore to him an ambiguous oath that they were not those he named, whereupon he laughed and said:—Know, O my lords, that I am not the Commander of the Faithful, and that I do but style myself thus to win my will of the sons of the city. My true name is Mohammed Ali, son of Ali the Jeweller, and my father was one of the notables of Baghdad, who left me great store of gold and silver and pearls and coral and rubies and chrysolites and other jewels, besides messuages and lands, Hammam-baths and brickeries, orchards and flower-gardens. Now as I sat in my shop one day surrounded by my eunuchs and dependents, behold, there came up a young lady, mounted on a she-mule and attended by three damsels like moons. Riding up to my shop she alighted and seated herself by my side and said, "Art thou Mohammed the Jeweller?" Replied I, "Even so! I am he, thy Mameluke, thy chattel." She asked, "Hast thou a necklace of jewels fit for me?" and I answered, "O my lady, I will show thee what I have; and lay all before thee, and if any please thee, it will be of thy slave's good luck; if they please thee not, of his ill fortune." Now I had by me an hundred necklaces and showed them all to her; but none of them pleased her, and she said, "I want a better than those I have seen." I had a small necklace which my father had bought at an hundred thousand dinars, and whose like was not to be found with any of the great kings; so I said to her, "O my lady, I have yet one necklace of fine stones fit for bezels, the like of which none possesseth, great or small." Said she, "Show it to me"; so I showed it to her, and she said, "This is what I wanted and what I have wished for all my life"; adding, "What is its price?"

¹ Katil = the Irish "kilt."

² This has been explained as a wazirial title of the time.

Quoth I, "It cost my father an hundred thousand dinars"; and she said, "I will give thee five thousand dinars to thy profit." I answered, "O my lady, the necklace and its owner are at thy service and I cannot gainsay thee." But she rejoined, "Needs must thou have the profit, and I am still most grateful to thee." Then she rose without stay or delay; and, mounting the mule in haste, said to me, "O my lord, in Allah's name, favour us with thy company to receive the money; for this thy day with us is white as milk.¹" So I shut the shop and accompanied her, in all security, till we came to a house, on which were manifest the signs of wealth and rank; for its door was wrought with gold and silver and ultramarine, and thereon were written these two couplets:—

Hola, thou mansion! woe ne'er enter thee; * Nor be thine owner e'er misused of Fate;

Excellent mansion to all guests art thou, * When other mansions to the guest are strait.

The young lady dismounted and entered the house, bidding me sit down on the bench at the gate, till the money-changer should arrive. So I sat awhile, when behold, a damsel came out to me and said, "O my lord, enter the vestibule; for it is a dishonour that thou shouldst sit at the gate." Thereupon I arose and entered the vestibule and sat down on the settle there; and as I sat, lo! another damsel came out and said to me, "O my lord, my mistress biddeth thee enter and sit down at the door of the saloon, to receive thy money." I entered and sat down, nor had I sat a moment when behold, a curtain of silk which concealed a throne of gold was drawn aside, and I saw seated thereon the lady who had made the purchase; and round her neck she wore the necklace which looked pale and wan by the side of a face as it were the rounded moon. At her sight, my wit was troubled and my mind confounded by reason of her exceeding beauty and loveliness; but when she saw me she rose from her throne and coming close up to me, said, "O light of mine eyes, is every handsome one like thee pitiless to his mistress?" I answered, "O my lady, beauty, all of it, is in thee and is but one of thy hidden charms." And she rejoined, "O Jeweller, know that I love thee and can hardly credit that I have brought thee hither." Then she bent towards me and I kissed her and she kissed me, and as she caressed me, drew me towards her and to her breast she pressed me.—

¹ The phrase is intelligible in all tongues; in Arabic it is opposed to "dark as night," "black as mud," and a host of unsavoury antitheses.

And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Jeweller continued :—Then she bent towards me and kissed and caressed me; and as she caressed me drew me towards her, and to her breast she pressed me. Now she knew by my condition that I had a mind to enjoy her; so she said to me, "O my lord, wouldst thou forgather with me unlawfully? By Allah, may he not live who would do the like of this sin and who takes pleasure in talk unclean! I am a maid, a virgin whom no man hath approached, nor am I unknown in the city. Knowest thou who I am?" Quoth I, "No, by Allah, O my lady!" and quoth she, "I am the Lady Dunyá, daughter of Yáhyá bin Khálid the Barmecide, and sister of Ja'afar, Wazir to the Caliph." Now as I heard this, I drew back from her, saying, "O my lady, it is no fault of mine if I have been over-bold with thee; it was thou didst encourage me to aspire to thy love by giving me access to thee." She answered, "No harm shall befall thee, and needs must thou attain thy desire in the only way pleasing to Allah. I am my own mistress, and the Kazi shall act as my guardian in consenting to the marriage-contract; for it is my will that I be to thee wife and thou be to me man." Then she sent for the Kazi and the witnesses, and busied herself with making ready; and when they came she said to them, "Mohammed Ali, bin Ali the Jeweller, seeketh me in wedlock and hath given me the necklace to my marriage-settlement; and I accept and consent." So they wrote out the contract of marriage between us; and ere I went in to her the servants brought the wine-furniture and the cups passed round after the fairest fashion and the goodliest ordering; and when the wine mounted to our heads, she ordered a damsel, a lute-player,¹ to sing. So she took the lute and sang to a pleasing and stirring motive these couplets :—

He comes; and fawn and branch and moon delight these eyne, * Fie² on his heart who sleeps o' nights without repine;

¹ Arab. "Awwádah," the popular word; not Udiyyah as in night cclvi "Ud" liter.=wood and "Al-Ud"=the wood, is, I have noted, the origin of our "lute." The Span. "laud" is larger and deeper than the guitar, and its seven strings are played upon with a plectrum of buffalo-horn.

² Arab. "Tabban lahu!"=loss (or ruin) to him. So "bu'dan lahu" = away with him, abeat in malam rem; and "Suhkan lahu" = Allah and mercy be far from him, no hope for him!

Fair youth, for whom Heaven willed to quench in cheek one light, *
 And left another light on other cheek bright li'en :
 I fain finesse my chiders when they mention him, * As though the hearing of his name I would decline;
 And willing ear I lend when they of other speak ; * Yet would my soul within outflow in floods of brine : Beauty's own prophet, he is all a miracle * Of heavenly grace, and greatest shows his face for sign¹ :
 To prayer Bilál-like cries that Mole upon his cheek * To ward from pearly brow all eyes of ill-design² :
 The censors of their ignorance would my love dispel * But after Faith
 I can't at once turn Infidel.

We were ravished by the sweet music she made striking the strings, and the beauty of the verses she sang ; and the other damsels went on to sing and to recite one after another, till ten had so done ; when the Lady Dunya took the lute, and playing a lively measure chanted these couplets :—

I swear by swayings of that form so fair, * Aye from thy parting fiery pangs I bear :
 Pity a heart which burneth in thy love, * O bright as fullest moon in blackest air !
 Vouchsafe thy boons to him who ne'er will cease * In light of wine-cup all thy charms declare, Amid the roses which with varied hues * Are to the myrtle-bush³ a mere despair.

When she had finished her verse, I took the lute from her hands, and playing a quaint and no vulgar prelude sang the following verses :—

Laud to my Lord who gave thee all of loveliness : * Myself amid thy thralls I willingly confess :
 O thou, whose eyes and glances captivate mankind, * Pray that I
 'scape those arrows shot with all thy stress !
 Two hostile rivals water and enflaming fire * Thy cheek hath married, which for marvel I profess :
 Thou art Sa'ir in heart of me and eke Na'im⁴ ; * Thou agro-dolce, eke heart's sweetest bitterness.

When she heard this my song she rejoiced with exceeding joy ;
 then, dismissing her slave-women, she brought me to a most

1 Arab. "Áyah" = Koranic verset, sign, miracle.

2 The mole on cheek calls to prayers for his preservation ; and it is black as "Bilal" the Abyssinian. "Fajran" may here mean either "A-morning" or "departing from grace."

3 i.e. the young beard (myrtle) can never hope to excel the beauties of his cheeks (roses).

4 i.e. Hell and Heaven.

goodly place, where they had spread us a bed of various colours. She did off her clothes and I had a lover's privacy of her and found her a pearl unpierced and a filly unriden. So I rejoiced in her and never in my born days spent I a more delicious night. —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Mohammed bin Ali the Jeweller continued:—So I went in unto the Lady Dunya, daughter of Yahya bin Khalid the Barmecide, and I found her a pearl unthridden and a filly unriden. So I rejoiced in her and repeated these couplets:—

O night here stay ! I want no morning bright ; * My lover's face to me is lamp and light¹ :

As ring of ring-dove round his neck's my arm ; * And made my palm, his mouth-veil ; and 'twas right.

This be the crown of bliss, and ne'er we'll cease * To clip, nor care to be in other plight.

And I abode with her a whole month, forsaking shop and family and home, till one day she said to me, "O light of my eyes, O my lord Mohammed, I have determined to go to the Hamman to-day ; so sit thou on this couch and rise not from thy place till I return to thee." "I hear and I obey," answered I, and she made me swear to this ; after which she took her women and went off to the bath. But by Allah, O my brothers, she had not reached the head of the street ere the door opened and in came an old woman, who said to me, "O my lord Mohammed, the Lady Zubaydah biddeth thee to her, for she hath heard of thy fine manners and accomplishments and skill in singing." I answered, "By Allah, I will not rise from my place till the Lady Dunya come back." Rejoined the old woman, "O my lord, do not anger the Lady Zubaydah with thee and vex her so as to make her thy foe ; nay, rise up and speak with her and return to thy place." So I rose at once and followed her into the presence of the Lady Zubaydah, and when I entered her presence she said to me, "O light of the eye, art thou the Lady Dunya's beloved ?" "I am thy Mameluke, thy chattel," replied I. Quoth she, "Sooth spake he who reported thee possessed of beauty and grace and good breeding and every fine quality; indeed, thou surpassest all praise and all report. But now sing to me, that I may hear thee." Quoth I, "Hearkening and obedience"; so she brought me a lute, and I sang to it these couplets:—

¹ The first couplet is not in the Mac. Edit. (ii. 171), which gives only a single couplet ; but it is found in the Bres. Edit. which entitles this tale "Story of the lying (or false=kāzib) Khalifah." Lane (ii. 392) of course does not translate it.

The hapless lover's heart is of his wooing weary grown; * And hand of sickness wasted him to naught but skin and bone;
Who should be amid the riders which the haltered camels urge, * But that same lover whose beloved doth in the litters wone:
To Allah's charge I leave that moon-like Beauty in your tents * Whom my heart loves, albe my glance on her may ne'er be thrown.
Now she is fain; then she is fierce: how sweet her coyness shows; *
Yea, sweet whatever doth or saith to lover lovèd one!

When I had finished my song she said to me, "Allah assain thy body and thy voice! Verily, thou art perfect in beauty and good breeding and singing. But now rise and return to thy place ere the Lady Dunya come back, lest she find thee not and be wroth with thee." Then I kissed ground before her and the old woman forewent me till I reached the door whence I came. So I entered and, going up to the couch, found that my wife had come back from the bath and was lying asleep there. Seeing this I sat down at her feet and rubbed them; whereupon she opened her eyes and, seeing me, drew up both her feet and gave me a kick that threw me off the couch,¹ saying, "O traitor, thou hast been false to thine oath and hast perjured thyself. Thou swarest to me that thou wouldst not rise from thy place; yet didst thou break thy promise and go to the Lady Zubaydah. By Allah, but that I fear public scandal, I would pull down her palace over her head!" Then said she to her black slave, "O Sawáb, arise and strike off this lying traitor's head, for we have no further need of him." So the slave came up to me and, tearing a strip from his skirt, bandaged with it my eyes² and would have struck off my head;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ In the East cloth of frieze that mates with cloth of gold must expect this treatment. Fath Ali Shah's daughters always made their husbands enter the nuptial bed by the foot end.

² This is always done, and for two reasons; the first humanity, that the blow may fall unawares; and secondly, to prevent the sufferer wincing, which would throw out the headsman.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Mohammed the jeweller continued:—So the slave came up to me, and tearing a strip from his skirt bandaged with it my eyes and would have struck off my head; but all her women, great and small, rose and came up to her and said to her, “O our lady, this is not the first who hath erred: indeed he knew not thy humour and hath done thee no offence deserving death.” Replied she, “By Allah, I must needs set my mark on him.” And she bade them bash me; so they beat me on my ribs, and the marks she saw are the scars of that fustigation. Then she ordered them to cast me out, and they carried me to a distance from the house and threw me down like a log. After a time I rose and dragged myself little by little to my own place, where I sent for a surgeon and showed him my hurts; and he comforted me and did his best to cure me. As soon as I was recovered I went to the Hammam, and, as my pains and sickness had left me, I repaired to my shop and took and sold all that was therein. With the proceeds I bought me four hundred white slaves, such as no King ever got together, and caused two hundred of them to ride out with me every day. Then I made me yonder barge whereon I spent five thousand gold pieces; and styled myself Caliph, and appointed each of my servants to the charge of some one of the Caliph’s officers and clad him in official habit. Moreover, I made proclamation, “Whoso goeth a-pleasuring on the Tigris by night, I will strike off his head, without ruth or delay”; and on such wise have I done this whole year past, during which time I have heard no news of the lady neither happened upon any trace of her. Then wept he copiously and repeated these couplets:—

By Allah! while the days endure ne’er shall forget her I, * Nor draw to any nigh save those who draw her to me nigh:
Like to the fullest moon her form and favour show to me; * Laud to her All-creating Lord, laud to the Lord on high!
She left me full of mourning, sleepless, sick with pine and pain * And ceaseth not my heart to yearn her mystery¹ to espy.

Now when Harun al-Rashid heard the young man’s story and knew the passion and transport and love-lowe that afflicted him, he was moved to compassion and wonder and said, “Glory be to ¹ Arab. “Ma’áni-há,” lit. her meanings, i.e. her inner woman opposed to the formal, seen by every one.

Allah, who hath appointed to every effect a cause ! ” Then they craved the young man’s permission to depart, which being granted, they took leave of him, the Caliph purposing to do him justice meet and him with the utmost munificence entreat ; and they returned to the palace of the Caliphate, where they changed clothes for others befitting their state and sat down, whilst Masrur the Swarder of High Justice stood before them. After awhile, quoth the Caliph to Ja’afar, “ O Wazir, bring me the young man ”—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the Caliph to his Minister, “ Bring me the young man with whom we were last night.” “ I hear and obey,” answered Ja’afar and going to the youth, saluted him, saying, “ Obey the summons of the Commander of the Faithful, the Caliph Harun al-Rashid.” So he returned with him to the palace, in great anxiety by reason of the summons ; and going in to the King kissed ground before him, and offered up a prayer for the endurance of his glory and prosperity, for the accomplishment of his desires, for the continuance of his beneficence and for the cessation of evil and punishment ; ordering his speech as best he might, and ending by saying, “ Peace be on thee, O Prince of True Believers and Protector of the folk of the Faith ! ” Then he repeated these two couplets :—

Kiss thou his fingers which no fingers are ; * Keys of our daily bread those fingers ken :

And praise his actions which no actions are ; * But precious necklaces round necks of men.

So the Caliph smiled in his face and returned his salute, looking on him with the eye of favour ; then he bade him draw near and sit down before him and said to him, “ O Mohammed Ali, I wish thee to tell me what befell thee last night, for it was strange and passing strange.” Quoth the youth, “ Pardon, O Commander of the Faithful, give me the kerchief of immunity, that my dread may be appeased and my heart eased.” Replied the Caliph, “ I promise thee safety from fear and woes.” So the young man told him his story from first to last, whereby the Caliph knew him to be a lover and severed from his beloved, and said to him, “ Desirest thou that I restore her to thee ? ” “ This were of the bounty of the Commander of the Faithful," answered the youth and repeated these two couplets:—

Ne'er cease thy gate be Ka'abah to mankind ; * Long may its threshold dust man's brow beseech !

That o'er all countries it may be proclaimed, * This is the Place and thou art Ibrahim.¹

Thereupon the Caliph turned to his Minister and said to him, "O Ja'afar, bring me thy sister, the Lady Dunya, daughter of the Wazir Yahya bin Khalid !" "I hear and I obey," answered he, and fetched her without let or delay. Now when she stood before the Caliph he said to her, "Dost thou know who this is?" and she replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, how should women have knowledge of men?" So the Caliph smiled and said, "O Dunya, this is thy beloved, Mohammed bin Ali the Jeweller. We are acquainted with his case, for we have heard the whole story from beginning to end, and have apprehended its inward and its outward; and it is no more hidden from me, for all it was kept in secrecy." Replied she, "O Commander of the Faithful, this was written in the Book of Destiny; I crave the forgiveness of Almighty Allah for the wrong I have wrought, and pray thee to pardon me of thy favour." At this the Caliph laughed and summoning the Kazi and witnesses, renewed the marriage-contract between the Lady Dunya and her husband, Mohammed Ali, son of the Jeweller, whereby there betided them, both her and him, the utmost felicity, and to their enviers mortification and misery. Moreover, he made Mohammed Ali one of his boon-companions, and they abode in joy and cheer and gladness, till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Sunderer of societies. And men also relate the pleasant tale of 1 Described in my Pilgrimage (iii. 168, 174, and 175) : it is the stone upon which the Patriarch stood when he built the Ka'abah, and is said to show the impress of the feet, but unfortunately I could not afford five dollars entrance-fee. Caliph Omar placed the station where it now is; before his time it adjoined the Ka'abah. The meaning of the text is, Be thy count a place of pious visitation, etc. At the "Station of Abraham," prayer is especially blessed and expects to be granted. "This is the place where Abraham stood; and whoever entereth therein shall be safe" (Koran, ii. 119). For the other fifteen places where petitions are favourably heard by Heaven, see ibid., iii 211-12.

2 As in the West, so in the East, women answer an unpleasant question by a counter-question.

ALI THE PERSIAN.

It is said that the Caliph Harun al-Rashid, being restless one night, sent for his Wazir and said to him, "O Ja'afar, I am sore wakeful and heavy-hearted this night, and I desire of thee what may solace my spirit and cause my breast to broaden with amusement." Quoth Ja'afar, "O Commander of the Faithful, I have a friend, by name Ali the Persian, who hath store of tales and pleasant stories such as lighten the heart and make care depart." Quoth the Caliph, "Fetch him to me," and quoth Ja'afar, "Hearkening and obedience"; and, going out from before him, sent to seek Ali, the Persian, and when he came said to him, "Answer the summons of the Commander of the Faithful." "To hear is to obey," replied Ali.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Persian replied, "To hear is to obey," and at once followed the Wazir into the presence of the Caliph, who bade him be seated and said to him, "O Ali, my heart is heavy within me this night and it hath come to my ear that thou hast great store of tales and anecdotes; so I desire of thee that thou let me hear what will relieve my despondency and brighten my melancholy." Said he, "O Commander of the Faithful, shall I tell thee what I have seen with my eyes or what I have heard with my ears?" He replied, "An thou have seen aught worth the telling, let me hear that." Replied Ali:—Hearkening and obedience. Know thou, O Commander of the Faithful, that some years ago I left this my native city of Baghdad on a journey, having with me a lad who carried a light leathern bag. Presently we came to a certain city, where, as I was buying and selling, behold, a rascally Kurd fell on me and seized my wallet perforce, saying, "This is my bag, and all which is in it is my property." Thereupon I cried aloud, "Ho Moslems,¹ one and all, deliver me from the hand of the vilest of oppressors!" But the folk said, "Come, both of you, to the Kazi and abide ye by his judgment with joint consent." So I agreed to submit myself to such decision and we both presented ourselves before the Kazi, who said, "What bringeth you hither and what is your case and your quarrel?" Quoth I, "We are men at difference, who appeal to thee and make complaint and submit ourselves to thy judgment." Asked the Kazi, "Which of you is the complainant?" so the Kurd came forward¹ and said, "Allah preserve our lord the Kazi! Verily, this bag is my bag, and all that is in it is my swag. It was lost from me and I found it with this man mine enemy." The Kazi asked, "When didst thou lose it?" and the Kurd answered, "But yesterday, and I passed a sleepless night by reason of its loss." "An it be thy bag," quoth the Kazi, "tell me what is in it." Quoth the Kurd, "There were in my bag two silver styles for eye-powder and antimony for the eyes and a kerchief for the hands, wherein I had laid two gilt cups and two candlesticks. Moreover, it contained two tents and two platters and two spoons, and a cushion and two leather rugs, and two ewers and a brass tray and two basins, and a cooking-pot and two water-jars and a ladle, and a sacking-needle, and a she-cat and two bitches, and a wooden trencher and two sacks and two saddles, and a gown and two fur pelisses, and a cow and two calves, and a she-goat and two sheep, and an ewe and two lambs, and two green pavilions, and a camel and two she-camels, and a lioness and two lions and a she-bear and two jackals, and a mattrass and two sofas, and an upper chamber and two saloons, and a portico and two sitting-rooms, and a kitchen with two doors, and a company of Kurds who will bear witness that the bag is my bag." Then said the Kazi to me, "And thou, sirrah, what sayest thou?" So I came forward, O Commander of the Faithful (and indeed the Kurd's speech had bewildered me) and said, "Allah advance our lord the Kazi! Verily, there was naught in this my wallet, save a little ruined tenement and another without a door, and a dog-house and a boys' school, and youths playing dice, and tents and tent-ropes, and the cities of Bassorah and Baghdad, and the palace of Shaddad bin Ad, and an ironsmith's forge and a fishing-net, and cudgels and pickets, and girls and boys and a thousand pimps who will testify that the bag is my bag." Now when the Kurd heard my words, he wept and wailed and said, "O my lord the Kazi, this my bag is known, and what is in it is a matter of renown; for in this bag there be castles and citadels, and cranes and beasts of prey, and men playing chess and draughts. Furthermore, in this my bag is a brood-mare and two colts, and a stallion and two blood-steeds, and two long lances; and it containeth eke a lion and two hares, and a city and two villages, and a whore and two sharking panders, and an hermaphrodite and two gallows-birds, and a blind man and two wights with good sight, and a limping cripple and two lameters, and a Christian ecclesiastic and two deacons, and a patriarch and two monks, and a Kazi and two assessors, who will be evidence that the bag is my bag." Quoth the Kazi to me, "And what sayst thou, O Ali?" So, O Commander of the Faithful, being filled with rage, I came forward and said, "Allah keep our lord the Kazi!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ This "Cry of Haro" often occurs throughout The Nights. In real life it is sure to collect a crowd, especially if an Infidel (non-Moslem) be its cause.

¹ In the East a cunning fellow always makes himself the claimant or complainant.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Persian continued:—So being filled with rage, O Commander of the Faithful, I came forward and said, "Allah keep our lord the Kazi! I had in this my wallet a coat of mail and a broadsword and armouries, and a thousand fighting rams, and a sheep-fold with its pasturage, and a thousand barking dogs and gardens, and vines and flowers and sweet smelling herbs, and figs and apples, and statues and pictures, and flagons and goblets, and fair-faced slave girls and singing-women and marriage feasts, and tumult and clamour, and great tracts of land, and brothers of success, which were robbers, and a company of daybreak-raiders with swords and spears and bows and arrows, and true friends and dear ones, and intimates and comrades, and men imprisoned for punishment, and cup-companions, and a drum and flutes, and flags and banners, and boys and girls and brides (in all their wedding bravery), and singing-girls, and five Abyssinian women and three Hindi maidens, and four damsels of Al-Madinah, and a score of Greek girls and eighty Kurdish dames, and seventy Georgian ladies, and Tigris and Euphrates, and a fowling-net, and a flint and steel, and many-columned Iram, and a thousand rogues and pimps, and horse-courses and stables, and mosques and baths, and a builder and a carpenter, and a plank and a nail, and a black slave with his flagcolet, and a captain and a caravan-leader, and towns and cities, and an hundred thousand dinars, and Cufa and Anbár,¹ and twenty chests full of stuffs, and twenty store-houses for victual, and Gaza and Askalon, and from Damietta to Al-Sawán,² and the palace of Kisra Anushirwán and the kingdom of Solomon, and from Wadi Nu'umán to the land of Khorasán, and Balkh and Ispahán, and from India to the Sudán. Therein also (may Allah prolong the life of our lord the Kazi!) are doublets and cloths, and a thousand sharp razors to shave off the Kazi's beard, except he fear my resentment and adjudge the bag to be my bag." Now when the Kazi heard what I and the Kurd avouched, he was confounded and said, "I see ye twain be none other than two pestilent fellows, atheistical villains who make sport of Kazis and magistrates, and stand not in fear of reproach. Never did tongue tell nor ear hear aught more extraordinary than that which ye pretend. By Allah, from China to Shajarat Umm Ghaylán, nor from Fars to Sudan, nor from Wadi Nu'uman to Khorasan, was ever heard the like of what ye avouch or credited the like of what ye affirm. Say, fellows, be this bag a bottomless sea or the Day of Resurrection that shall gather together the just and unjust?" Then the Kazi bade them open the bag; so I opened it and behold! there was in it bread and a lemon, and cheese and olives. So I threw the bag down before the Kurd and ganged my gait. Now when the Caliph heard this tale from Ali the Persian, he laughed till he fell on his back and made him a handsome present.³ And men also relate a TALE OF HARUN AL-RASHID AND THE SLAVE-GIRL AND THE IMAM ABU YUSUF.

It is said that Ja'afar the Barmecide was one night carousing with Al-Rashid, who said, "O Ja'afar, it hath reached me that thou hast bought such and such a slave-girl. Now I have long sought her for she is passing fair; and my heart is taken up with love of her, so do thou sell her to me." He replied, "I will not sell her, O Commander of the Faithful," Quoth he, "Then give her to me." Quoth the other, "Nor will I give her." Then Al-Rashid exclaimed, "Be Zubaydah triply divorced an thou shall not either sell or give her to me!" And Ja'afar exclaimed, "Be my wife triply divorced an I either sell or give her to thee!" After a while they recovered from their tipsiness and were aware of having fallen into a grave dilemma, but knew not by what device to extricate themselves. Then said Al-Rashid, "None can help us in this strait but Abú Yúsuf."¹ So they sent for him, and this was in the middle of the night; and when the messenger reached him he arose in alarm, saying to himself, "I should not be sent for at this tide and time, save by reason of some question of moment to Al-Islam." He went out in haste and mounted his she-mule, saying to his servant, "Take the mule's nose-bag with thee; it may be she hath not finished her feed; and when we come to the Caliph's palace, put the bag on her that she may eat what is left of her fodder during the last of the night." And the man replied, "I hear and obey." Now when the Imam was admitted to the presence, Al-Rashid rose to receive him and seated him on the couch beside himself (where he was wont to seat none save the Kazi), and said to him, "We have not sent for thee at this untimely time and tide save to advise us upon a grave matter, which is such and such, and wherewith we know not how to deal." And he expounded to him the case. Abu Yusuf answered, "O Commander of the Faithful, this is the easiest of things." Then he turned to Ja'afar and said, "O Ja'afar, sell half of her to the Commander of the Faithful and give him the other half; so shall ye both be quit of your oaths." The Caliph was delighted with this, and both did as he prescribed. Then said Al-Rashid, "Bring me the girl at once,"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ On the Euphrates some 40 miles west of Baghdad. The word is written "Anbár" and pronounced "Ambár," as usual with the "n" before "b"; the case of the Greek double Gamma.

² Syene on the Nile.

³ The tale is in the richest Rabelaisian humour; and the requisitions of the "Saj'a" (rhymed prose) in places explain the grotesque combinations. It is difficult to divine why Lane omits it; probably he held a hearty laugh not respectable.

¹ A lawyer of the eighth century, one of the chief pupils of the Imam Abu Hanifah and Kazi of Baghdad under the third, fourth and fifth Abbasides. The tale is told in the quasi-historical Persian work, "Nigáristán" (The Picture-gallery), and is repeated by Richardson, Diss. 7, xiii. None seems to have remarked that the distinguished legist, Abu Yusuf, was on this occasion a law-breaker; the Kazi's duty being to carry out the code, not to break it by the tricks of a cunning attorney. In Harun's day, however, some regard was paid to justice; not under his successors, one of whom, Al-Muktadir bi 'Iláh (A. H. 295 = 907), made the damsel Yamika President of the Diwán al-Mazálim (Court of the Wronged), a tribunal which took cognizance of tyranny and oppression in high places.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-seventh Night, ⁹

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph Harun al-Rashid commanded, "Bring me the girl at once, for I long for her exceedingly." So they brought her, and the Caliph said to Abu Yusuf, "I have a mind to have her forthright; for I cannot bear to abstain from her during the prescribed period of purification; now how is this to be done?" Abu Yusuf replied, "Bring me one of thine own male slaves who hath never been manumitted." So they brought one, and Abu Yusuf said, "Give me leave to marry her to him; then let him divorce her before consummation; and thus shall it be lawful for thee to lie with her before purification." This second expedient pleased the Caliph yet more than the first; he sent for the Mameluke and, whenas he came, said to the Kazi, "I authorise thee to marry her to him." Accordingly the Imam proposed the marriage to the slave, who accepted it and performed the ceremony; after which he said to the slave, "Divorce her, and thou shalt have an hundred dinars." But he replied, "I won't do this"; and the Imam went on to increase his offer, and the slave to refuse till he bid him a thousand dinars. Then the man asked him, "Doth it rest with me to divorce her, or with thee or with the Commander of the Faithful?" He answered, "It is in thy hand." "Then by Allah," quoth the slave, "I will never do it; no, never!" Hearing these words the Caliph was exceeding wroth and said to the Imam, "What is to be done, O Abu Yusuf?" Replied he, "Be not concerned, O Commander of the Faithful; the thing is easy. Make this slave the damsel's chattel." Quoth Al-Rashid, "I give him to her"; and the Imam said to the girl, "Say:—I accept." So she said, "I accept"; whereon quoth Abu Yusuf, "I pronounce separation from bed and board and divorce between them, for that he hath become her property, and so the marriage is annulled." With this, Al-Rashid rose to his feet and exclaimed, "It is the like of thee that shall be Kazi in my time." Then he called for sundry trays of gold and emptied them before Abu Yusuf, to whom he said, "Hast thou wherein to put this?" The Imam bethought him of the mule's nose-bag; so he sent for it and filling it with gold took it and went home. And on the morrow, he said to his friends, "There is no easier nor shorter road to the goods of this world and the next than that of religious learning; for, see, I have gotten all this money by answering two or three questions." So consider thou, O polite reader,¹ the pleasantness of this anecdote, for it compriseth divers goodly features, amongst which are the complaisance of Ja'afar to Al-Rashid, and the wisdom of the Caliph who chose such a Kazi and the excellent learning of Abu Yusuf, may Almighty Allah have mercy on their souls one and all! And they also tell the

TALE OF THE LOVER WHO FEIGNED HIMSELF A THIEF.

WHEN Khálid ibn Abdallah al-Kasri² was Emir of Bassorah, there came to him one day a company of men dragging a youth of exceeding beauty and lofty bearing and perfumed attire; whose aspect expressed good breeding, abundant wit, and dignity of the gravest. They brought him before the Governor, who asked what it was and they replied, "This fellow is a thief, whom we caught last night in our dwelling-house." Whereupon Khalid looked at him and was pleased with his well-favouredness and elegant aspect; so he said to the others, "Loose him," and going up to the young man, asked what he had to say for himself. He replied, "Verily the folk have spoken truly and the case is as they have said." Quoth Khalid, "And what moved thee to this and thou so noble of port and comely of mien?" Quoth the other, "The lust after worldly good, and the ordinance of Allah (extolled and exalted be He!)." Rejoined Khalid, "Be thy mother bereaved of thee³! Hadst thou not, in thy fair face and sound sense and good breeding, what should restrain thee from thieving?" Answered the young man, "O Emir, leave this talk and proceed to what Almighty Allah hath ordained; this is what my hands have earned, and, 'God is not unjust towards mankind.'⁴" So Khalid was silent awhile considering the matter; then he bade the young man draw near him and said, "Verily,

¹ Here the writer evidently forgets that Shahrazad is telling the story to the king, as Boccaccio (ii 7) forgets that Pamfilo is speaking. Such inconsequences are common in Eastern story-books, and a goody-goody sentiment is always heartily received as in an English theatre.

² In the Mac. Edit. (ii. 182) "Al-Kushayri." Al-Kasri was Governor of the two Iraks (i.e., Bassorah and Cufa) in the reign of Al-Hisham, tenth Omniade (A.D. 723-741).

³ Arab "Thakilata-k Ummak!" This is not so much a curse as a playful phrase, like "Confound the fellow." So "Kátala-k Allah" (Allah slay thee) and "Lá abá lak" (thou hast no father or mother). These words are even complimentary on occasions, as a good shot or a fine recitation, meaning that the praised far excels the rest of his tribe.

⁴ Koran, iii. 178.

thy confession before witnesses perplexeth me, for I cannot believe thee to be a thief: haply thou hast some story that is other than one of theft; and if so tell it me." Replied the youth, "O Emir, imagine naught other than what I have confessed to in thy presence; for I have no tale to tell save that verily I entered these folks' house and stole what I could lay hands on, and they caught me and took the stuff from me and carried me before thee." Then Khalid bade clap him in gaol and commanded a crier to cry throughout Bassorah, "O yes! O yes! Whoso be minded to look upon the punishment of such an one, the thief, and the cutting-off of his hand, let him be present to-morrow morning at such a place!" Now when the young man found himself in prison, with irons on his feet, he sighed heavily and with tears streaming from his eyes extemporised these couplets:—

When Khálid menaced off to strike my hand • If I refuse to tell him of her ease;

Quoth I, "Far, far fro' me that I should tell • A love, which ever shall my heart engrace;

Loss of my hand for sin I have confessed • To me were easier than to shame her face."

The warders heard him and went and told Khalid who, when it was dark night, sent for the youth and conversed with him. He found him clever and well-bred, intelligent, lively and a pleasant companion; so he ordered him food and he ate. Then after an hour's talk said Khalid, "I know indeed thou hast a story to tell that is no thief's; so when the Kazi shall come to-morrow morning and shall question thee about this robbery, do thou deny the charge of theft and avouch what may avert the pain and penalty of cutting off thy hand; for the Apostle (whom Allah bless and keep!) saith:—In cases of doubt, eschew punishment." Then he sent him back to prison,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Khalid, after conversing with the youth, sent him back to prison, where he passed the night. And when morning dawned the folk assembled to see his hand cut off, nor was there a soul in Bassorah, man or woman, but was present to look upon the punishment of that handsome youth. Then Khalid mounted in company of the notables of the city and others; and, summoning all four Kazis, sent for the young man, who came hobbling and stumbling in his fetters. There was none saw him but wept over him, and the women all lifted up their voices in lamentation as for the dead. Then the Kazi bade silence the women and said to the prisoner, "These folk avouch that thou didst enter their dwelling-house and steal their goods: belike thou stolest less than a quarter dinar¹?" Replied he, "Nay, I stole that and more." "Peradventure," rejoined the Kazi, "thou art partner with the folk in some of the goods?" Quoth the young man, "Not so: it was all theirs, and I had no right in it." At this Khalid was wroth and rose and smote him on the face with his whip, applying to his own case this couplet:—

Man wills his wish to him accorded be; * But Allah naught accords save what He wills.

Then he called for the butcher to do the work, who came and drew forth his knife, and taking the prisoner's hand set the blade to it, when, behold, a damsel pressed through the crowd of women clad in tattered clothes,² and cried out and threw himself on the young man. Then she unveiled and showed a face like the moon; whereupon the people raised a mighty clamour and there was like to have been a riot amongst them and a violent scene. But she cried out her loudest, saying, "I conjure thee, by Allah, O Emir, hasten not to cut off this man's hand, till thou hast read what is in this scroll!" So saying, she gave him a scroll, and Khalid took it and opened it and read therein these couplets:—

"Ah, Khalid! this one is a slave of love distraught, * And these bowed eyelashes sent shaft that caused his grief:
Shot him an arrow sped by eyes of mine, for he, * Wedded to burning love, of ills hath no relief:
He hath avowed a deed he never did, the while * Deeming this better than disgrace of lover lief:
Bear then, I pray, with this distracted lover mine * Whose noble nature falsely calls himself a thief!"

When Khalid had read these lines, he withdrew himself from the people and summoned the girl and questioned her; and she told him that the young man was her lover and she his mistress;

¹ Arab. "Al-Nisáb" = the minimum sum (about half-a-crown) for which mutilation of the hand is prescribed by religious law. The punishment was truly barbarous; it chastised a rogue by means which prevented hard honest labour for the rest of his life.

² To show her grief.

and that, thinking to visit her he came to the dwelling of her people and threw a stone into the house to warn her of his coming. Her father and brothers heard the noise of the stone and sallied out on him; but he, hearing them coming, caught up all the household stuff and made himself appear a robber to cover his mistress's honour. "Now when they saw him they seized him (continued she), crying:—A thief! and brought him before thee, whereupon he confessed to the robbery and persisted in his confession, that he might spare me disgrace; and this he did, making himself a thief, of the exceeding nobility and generosity of his nature." Khalid answered, "He is indeed worthy to have his desire"; and, calling the young man to him, kissed him between the eyes. Then he sent for the girl's father and bespoke him, saying, "O Shaykh, we thought to carry out the law of mutilation in the case of this young man; but Allah (to whom be Honour and Glory!) hath preserved us from this, and I now adjudge him the sum of ten thousand dirhams, for that he would have given his hand for the preservation of thine honour and that of thy daughter and for the sparing of shame to you both. Moreover, I adjudge other ten thousand dirhams to thy daughter, for that she made known to me the truth of the case; and I ask thy leave to marry her to him." Rejoined the old man, "O Emir, thou hast my consent." So Khalid praised Allah and thanked Him and improved the occasion by preaching a goodly sermon and a prayerful;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Two Hundred and Ninety-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Khalid praised Allah and thanked Him and improved the occasion by preaching a goodly sermon and a prayerful; after which he said to the young man, "I give thee to wife the damsel, such an one here present, with her own permission and her father's consent; and her wedding settlement shall be this money, to wit, ten thousand dirhams." "I accept this marriage at thy hands," replied the youth"; and Khalid bade them carry the money on brass trays in procession to the young man's house, whilst the people dispersed fully satisfied. "And surely (quoth he who tells the tale¹) never saw I a rarer day than this, for that it began with tears and annoy ; and it ended with smiles and joy.'

¹ Abú Sa'ïd Abd al-Malik bin Kurayb, surnamed Al-Asma'i from his grandfather, flor. A.H. 122-206 (=739-830) and wrote amongst a host of compositions the well-known Romance of Antar. See in D'Herbelot the right royal directions given to him by Harun al-Rashid.

And in contrast of this story is this piteous tale of

JA'AFAR THE BARMECIDE AND THE BEAN-SELLER.

WHEN Harun al-Rashid crucified Ja'afar the Barmecide¹ he commanded that all who wept or made moan for him should also be crucified ; so the folk abstained from that. Now it chanced that a wild Arab, who dwelt in a distant wold, used every year to bring to the aforesaid Ja'afar an ode² in his honour, for which he rewarded him with a thousand dinars ; and the Badawi took them and, returning to his own country, lived upon them, he and his family, for the rest of the year. Accordingly, he came with his ode at the wonted time, and finding that Ja'afar had been crucified betook himself to the place where his body was hanging, and there made his camel kneel down and wept with sore weeping and mourned with grievous mourning ; and he recited his ode and fell asleep. Presently Ja'afar the Barmecide appeared to him in a vision and said, " Verily thou hast wearied thyself to come to us and findest us as thou seest ; but go to Bassorah and ask for a man there whose name is such and such, one of the merchants of the town, and say to him :—Ja'afar the Barmecide saluteth thee and biddeth thee give me a thousand dinars by the token of the bean." Now when the wild Arab awoke, he repaired to Bassorah, where he sought out the merchant and found him, and repeated to him what Ja'afar had said in the dream ; at which he wept with weeping so sore that he was like to depart the world. Then he welcomed the Badawi and seated him by his side and made his stay pleasant and entertained him three days as an honoured guest ; and when he was minded to depart he gave him a thousand and five hundred dinars, saying, " The thousand are what is commanded to thee, and the five hundred are a gift from me to thee ; and every year thou shalt have of me a thousand gold pieces." Now when the Arab ¹ There are many accounts of his death ; but it is generally held that he was first beheaded. The story in the text is also variously told, and the Persian "Nigáristán" adds some unpleasant comments upon the House of Abbas. The Persians, for reasons which will be explained in the Terminal Essay, show the greatest sympathy with the Barmecides ; and abominate the Abbasides even more than the latter detested the Ommiades.

² Not written, as the European reader would suppose.

was about to take leave, he said to the merchant, "Allah upon thee, tell me the story of the bean, that I may know the origin of all this." He answered:—In the early part of my life I was poor and hawked hot beans¹ about the streets of Baghdad to keep me alive. So I went out one raw and rainy day, without clothes enough on my body to protect me from the weather; now shivering for excess of cold and now stumbling into the pools of rain-water, and altogether in so piteous a plight as would make me shudder with goose-skin to look upon. But it chanced that Ja'afar that day was seated, with his officers and his concubines, in an upper chamber overlooking the street when his eyes fell on me; so he took pity on my case and, sending one of his dependants to fetch me to him, said as soon as he saw me, "Sell thy beans to my people." So I began to mete out the beans with a measure I had by me; and each who took a measure of beans filled the measure with gold pieces till all my store was gone and my basket was clean empty. Then I gathered together the gold I had gotten, and Ja'afar said to me, "Hast thou any beans left?" "I know not," answered I, and then sought in the basket, but found only one bean. So Ja'afar took from me the single bean and splitting it in twain kept one half himself and gave the other to one of his concubines, saying, "For how much wilt thou buy this half bean?" She replied, "For the tale of all this gold twice-told"; whereat I was confounded and said to myself, "This is impossible." But, as I stood wondering, behold, she gave an order to one of her handmaids, and the girl brought me the sum of the collected moneys twice-told. Then said Ja'afar, "And I will buy the half I have by me for double the sum of the whole," presently adding, "Now take the price of thy bean." And he gave an order to one of his servants, who gathered together the whole of the money and laid it in my basket; and I took it and went my ways. Then I betook myself to Bassorah, where I traded with the moneys and Allah prospered me amply, to Him

¹ Arab. "Fúl al-hárr" = beans like horsebeans soaked and boiled, as opposed to the "Fúl Mudammas" (esp. of Egypt) = unshelled beans steamed and boiled all night and eaten with linseed oil as "kitchen" or relish. Lane (M. E., chapt. v.) calls them after the debased Cairene pronunciation, Mudemmes. A legend says that, before the days of Pharaoh (always he of Moses), the Egyptians lived on pistachioes, which made them a witty, lively race. But the tyrant remarking that the domestic ass, which eats beans, is degenerate from the wild ass, uprooted the pistachio-trees and compelled the lieges to feed on beans which made them a heavy, gross, cowardly people, fit only for burdens. Badawin deride "bean-eaters," although they do not loathe the pulse like onions.

be the praise and the thanks ! So, if I give thee every year a thousand dinars of the bounty of Ja'afar, it will in no wise injure me. Consider, then, the munificence of Ja'afar's nature and how he was praised both alive and dead, the mercy of Allah Almighty be upon him ! And men also recount the tale of

ABU MOHAMMED HIGHT LAZYBONES.

It is told that Harun al-Rashid was sitting one day on the throne of the Caliphate, when there came in to him a youth of his eunuchry, bearing a crown of red gold, set with pearls and rubies and all manner of other gems and jewels, such as money might not buy ; and, bussing ground between his hands, said, "O Commander of the Faithful, the Lady Zubaydah kisseth earth before thee"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say. Whereupon quoth her sister Duniyazad, "How pleasant is thy tale and profitable ; and how sweet is thy speech and how delectable !" "And where is this," replied Shahrazad, "compared with what I shall tell you next night an I live and the King grant me leave !" Thereupon quoth the King to himself, "By Allah, I will not slay her until I hear the end of her tale."

Now when it was the Three Hundredth Night,

Quoth Duniyazad, "Favour us, O my sister, with thy tale"; and she replied, "With joy and good will, if the King accord me leave"; whereupon the King said, "Tell thy tale, O Shahrazad." So she pursued:—It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the youth said to the Caliph, "The Lady Zubaydah kisseth earth before thee and saith to thee, Thou knowest she hath bidden make this crown, which lacketh a great jewel for its dome-top ; and she hath made search among her treasures, but cannot find a gem of size to suit her mind." Quoth the Caliph to his Chamberlains and Viceregents, "Make search for a great jewel, such as Zubaydah desireth." So they sought, but found nothing befitting her and told the Caliph, who, vexed and annoyed thereat, exclaimed, "How am I Caliph and King of the Kings of the earth and cannot find so small a matter as a jewel ? Woe to you ! Ask of the merchants." So they enquired of the traders, who replied, "Our lord the Caliph will not find a jewel such as he requireth save with a man of Bassorah, by name Abú Mohammed hight Lazybones." Thereupon they acquainted the Caliph with this, and he bade his Wazir Ja'afar send a note to the Emir Mohammed al-Zubaydí, Governor of Bassorah, commanding him to equip Abu Mohammed Lazybones and bring him into the presence of the Commander of the Faithful. The Minister accordingly wrote a note to that effect and despatched it by Masrur, who set out forthright for the city of Bassorah, and went in to the Emir Mohammed al-Zubaydi, who rejoiced in him and treated him with the highest honour. Then Masrur read him the mandate of the Prince of True Believers, Harun al-Rashid, to which he replied, "I hear and I obey," and forthwith despatched him, with a company of his followers, to Abu Mohammed's house. When they reached it, they knocked at the door, whereupon a page came out and Masrur said to him, "Tell thy lord, The Commander of the Faithful summoneth thee." The servant went in and told his master, who came out and found Masrur, the Caliph's Chamberlain, and a company of the Governor's men at the door. So he kissed ground before Masrur and said, "I hear and obey the summons of the Commander of the Faithful; but first enter ye my house." They replied, "We cannot do that, save in haste; even as the Prince of True Believers commanded us, for he awaiteth thy coming." But he said, "Have patience with me a little, till I set my affairs in order." So after much pressure and abundant persuasion, they entered the house with him and found the vestibule hung with curtains of azure brocade, purpled with red gold, and Abu Mohammed Lazybones bade one of his servants carry Masrur to the private Hammam. Now this bath was in the house, and Masrur found its walls and floors of rare and precious marbles, wrought with gold and silver, and its waters mingled with rose-water. Then the servants served Masrur and his company with the perfection of service; and on their going forth of the Hammam, clad them in robes of honour, brocade work interwoven with gold. And after leaving the bath Masrur and his men went in to Abu Mohammed Lazybones and found him seated in his upper chamber; and over his head hung curtains of gold-brocade, wrought with pearls and jewels, and the pavilion was spread with cushions embroidered in red gold. Now the owner was sitting softly upon a quilted cloth covering a settee inlaid with stones of price; and when he saw Masrur he went forward to meet him, and bidding him welcome seated him by his side. Then he called for the food-trays; so they brought them, and when Masrur saw the tables, he exclaimed, "By Allah, never did I behold the like of these appointments in the palace of the Commander of the Faithful!" For indeed the trays contained every manner of meat all served in dishes of gilded porcelain.¹ So we ate and drank and made merry till the end of the day (quoth Masrur) when the host gave to each and every of us five thousand dinars; and on the morrow he clad us in dresses of honour of green and gold, and entreated us with the utmost worship. Then said Masrur to him, "We can tarry no longer for fear of the Caliph's displeasure." Answered Abu Mohammed Lazybones, "O my lord, have patience with us till the morrow, that we may equip ourselves, and we will then depart with you." So they tarried with him that day and slept the night; and next morning Abu Mohammed's servants saddled him a she-mule with selle and trappings of gold, set with all manner pearls and stones of price; whereupon quoth Masrur to himself, "I wonder when Abu Mohammed shall present himself in such equipage, if the Caliph will ask him how he came by all this wealth." Thereupon they took leave of Al-Zubaydi and setting out from Bassorah fared on without ceasing to fare, till they reached Baghdad-city, and presented themselves before the Caliph, who bade Abu Mohammed be seated. He sat down and addressed the Caliph in courtly phrase, saying, "O Commander of the Faithful, I have brought with me an humble offering by way of homage; have I thy gracious permission to produce it?" Al-Rashid replied, "There is no harm in that,"² whereupon Abu Mohammed bade his men bring in a chest, from which he took a number of rarities, and amongst the rest trees of gold with leaves of white emerald,³ and fruits of pigeon-blood rubies and topazes and new pearls and bright. And as the Caliph was struck with admiration he fetched a second chest and brought out of it a tent of brocade, crowned

1 No porcelain was ever, as far as we can discover, made in Egypt or Syria of the olden day; but, as has been said, there was a regular caravan-intercourse with China. At Damascus I dug into the huge rubbish-heaps and found quantities of pottery, but no china. The same has lately been done at Clysma, the artificial mound near Suez, and the glass and pottery prove it to have been a Roman work which defended the mouth of the old classical sweet-water canal.

2 Arab. "Lá baas ba-zálik," conversational for "Lá jaram" = there is no harm in it, no objection to it; and, sometimes, "it is a matter of course."

3 A white emerald is yet unknown; but this adds only to the Oriental extravagance of the picture. I do not think with Lane (ii. 426) that "abyaz" here can mean "bright." Dr. Steingass suggests a clerical error for "khazar" (green).

with pearls and jacinths and emeralds and jaspers and other precious stones; its poles were of freshly-cut Hindi aloes-wood, and its skirts were set with the greenest smaragds. Thereon were depicted all sorts of animals such as beasts and birds, spangled with precious stones, rubies, emeralds, chrysolites, and balasses and every kind of noble metal. Now when Al-Rashid saw these things, he rejoiced with exceeding joy, and Abu Mohammed Lazybones said to him, "O Commander of the Faithful, deem not that I have brought these to thee, fearing aught or coveting anything; but I knew myself to be but a man of the people, and that such things befitted none save the Commander of the Faithful. And now with thy leave I will show thee for thy diversion something of what I can do." Al-Rashid replied, "Do what thou wilt, that we may see." "To hear is to obey," said Abu Mohammed, and moving his lips, beckoned the palace battlements,¹ whereupon they inclined to him; then he made another sign to them, and they returned to their place. Presently he made a sign with his eye, and there appeared before him closets with closed doors, to which he spoke, and lo, the voices of birds answered him from within. The Caliph marvelled with passing marvel at this and said to him, "How camest thou by all this, seeing that thou art known only as Abu Mohammed Lazybones, and they tell me that thy father was a cupper, serving in a public Hammam, who left thee nothing?" Whereupon he answered, Listen to my story,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and First Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abu Mohammed Lazybones thus spake to the Caliph:—O Prince of True Believers, listen to my story, for it is a marvellous and its particulars are wondrous; were it graven with graver-needles upon the eye-corners it were a warner to whoso would be warned. Quoth Al-Rashid, "Let us hear all thou hast to say, O Abu Mohammed!" So he began:—Know then, O Commander of the Faithful (Allah prolong to thee glory and dominion!), the report of the folk, that I am known as the Lazybones and that my father left me nothing is true; for he was, as thou hast said, nothing but a barber-cupper in a Hammam. And I throughout my youth was the idlest wight on the face of earth; indeed, so great was my sluggishness, that if I lay at full length in the sultry season and the sun came round upon me I was too lazy to rise and remove from the sun to the shade. And thus I abode till I reached my fifteenth year, when my father deceased in the mercy of Allah Almighty and left me nothing. However, my mother used to go out a-charing and feed me and give me to drink, whilst I lay on my side. Now it came to pass that one day she came in to me with five silver dirhams, and said to me, "O my son, I hear that Shaykh Abú al-Muzaffar¹ is about to go a voyage to China." (Now this Shaykh was a good and charitable man who loved the poor.) "So come, O my son, take these five silver bits; and let us both carry them to him and beg him to buy thee therewith somewhat from the land of China; so haply thou mayst make a profit of it by the bounty of Allah, whose name be exalted!" I was too idle to move for her; but she swore by the Almighty that, except I rose and went with her, she would bring me neither meat nor drink nor come in to me, but would leave me to die of hunger and thirst. Now when I heard her words, O Commander of the Faithful, I knew she would do as she threatened for her knowledge of my sluggishness; so I said to her, "Help me to sit up." She did so, and I wept the while and said to her, "Bring me my shoes." Accordingly she brought them and I said, "Put them on my feet." She put them on my feet, and I said, "Lift me up off the ground." So she lifted me up and I said, "Support me that I may walk." So she supported me, and I continued to fare a-foot, at times stumbling over my skirts, till we came to the river-bank, where we saluted the Shaykh, and I said to him, "O my uncle, art thou Abu al-Muzaffar?" "At thy service," answered he; and I, "Take these dirhams and with them buy me somewhat from the land of China: haply Allah may vouchsafe me a profit of it." Quoth the Shaykh to his companions, "Do ye know this youth?" They answered, "Yes, he is known as Abu Mohammed Lazybones, and we never saw him stir from his house till this moment." Then said he to me, "O my son, give me the silver with the blessing of Almighty Allah!" So he took the money, saying, "Bismillah—in the name of Allah!"—and I returned home with my mother. Presently Shaykh Abu al-Muzaffar set sail with a company of merchants, and stayed not till they reached the land of China, where he and his bought and sold; and, having won what they wished, set out on their homeward voyage. When they had been three days at sea, the Shaykh said to his company, "Stay the vessel!" They asked, "What dost thou want?" and he answered, "Know that I have forgotten the commission wherewith Abu Mohammed Lazybones charged me; so let us turn back that we may lay out his money on somewhat whereby he may profit." They cried, "We conjure thee, by Allah Almighty turn not back with us; for we have traversed a long distance and a sore, and while so doing we have endured sad hardship and many terrors." Quoth he, "There is no help for it but we return"; and they said, "Take from us double the profit of the five dirhams, and turn us not back." He agreed to this and they collected for him an ample sum of money. Thereupon they sailed on till they came to an island wherein was much people; when they moored thereto and the merchants went ashore to buy thence a stock of precious metals and pearls and jewels, and so forth. Presently Abu al-Muzaffar saw a man seated, with many apes before him, and amongst them one whose hair had been plucked off; and as often as their owner's attention was diverted from them, the other apes fell upon the plucked one and beat him and threw him on their master; whereupon the man rose and bashed them and bound them and punished them for this; and all the apes were wroth with the plucked ape on this account and tunded him the more. When Shaykh Abu al-Muzaffar saw this, he felt for and took compassion upon the plucked ape, and said to his master, "Wilt thou sell me yonder monkey?" Replied the man, "Buy," and Abu al-Muzaffar rejoined, "I have with me five dirhams belonging to an orphan lad. Wilt thou sell it me for that sum?" Answered the monkey-merchant, "It is a bargain; and Allah give thee a blessing of him!" So he made over the beast and received his money; and the Shaykh's slaves took the ape and tied him up in the ship. Then they loosed sail and made for another island, where they cast anchor; and there came down divers, who plunged for precious stones, pearls and other gems; so the merchants hired them to dive for money and they dived. Now when the ape saw them doing this, he loosed himself from his bonds and jumping off the ship's side plunged with them, whereupon quoth Abu al-Muzaffar, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might, save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! The monkey is lost to us with the luck of the poor fellow for whom we bought him." And they despaired of him; but, after a while, the company of divers rose to the surface, and behold, among them was the ape, with his hands full of jewels of price, which he threw down before Abu al-Muzaffar. The Shaykh marvelled at this and said, "There is much mystery in this monkey!" Then they cast off and sailed till they came to a third island, called the Isle of the Zunúj,¹ who are a people of the blacks, which eat the flesh of the sons of Adam. When the blacks saw them, they boarded them in dug-outs² and, taking all in the vessel, pinioned them and carried them to their King, who bade slaughter certain of the merchants. So they slaughtered them by cutting their throats and ate their flesh; and the rest of the traders passed the night in bonds and were in sore concern. But when it was midnight, the ape arose and going up to Abu al-Muzaffar, loosed his bonds; and, as the others saw him free, they said, "Allah grant our deliverance may be at thy hands, O Abu al-Muzaffar!" But he replied, "Know that he who delivered me, by leave of Allah Almighty, was none other than this monkey"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Sharárf" plur. of Shurráfah = crenelles or battlements; mostly trefoil-shaped; sculptured coquins, which a six-pounder would crumble.

¹ Pronounce Abul-Muzaffar = Father of the Conqueror.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abu al-Muzaffar declared, "None loosed me, by leave of Allah Almighty, save this monkey, and I buy my release of him at a thousand dinars"; whereupon the merchants rejoined, "And we likewise, each and every, will pay him a thousand dinars if he release us." With this the ape arose and went up to them and loosed their bonds one by one till he had freed them all, when they made for the vessel, and boarding her found all safe and nothing missing from her. So they cast off and set sail; and

¹ I have explained the word in my "Zanzibar, City, Island and Coast," vol. i. chapt. v. There is still a tribe, the Wadoe, reputed cannibal on the opposite low East African shore. These blacks would hardly be held "sons of Adam." "Zanj" corrupted to "Zinj" (plur. Zunúj) is the Persian "Zang" or "Zangi," a black, altered by the Arabs, who ignore the hard g; and, with the suffixion of the Persian -bár (region, as in Malabar) we have Zang-bár which the Arabs have converted to "Zanjibar," in poetry "Mulk al Zunúj" = Land of the Zang. The term is old; it is the Zingis or Zingisa of Ptolemy and the Zingium of Cosmas Indicopleustes; and it shows the influence of Persian navigation in pre-Islamitic ages. For further details readers will consult "The Lake Regions of Central Africa" vol. i chapt. ii.

² Arab. "Kawárib" plur. of "Kárib" prop. a dinghy, a small boat belonging to a ship. Here it refers to a canoe (a Carib word) pop. "dug-out," and classically "monoxyle," a boat made of a single tree-trunk hollowed by fire and trimmed with axe and adze. Some of these rude craft, which when manned, remind one of saturnine Caliph Omar's "a log of wood with worms aficat," measure 60 feet long and more.

presently Abu al-Muzaffar said to them, "O merchants, fulfil your promise to the monkey." "We hear and we obey," answered they; and each one paid him one thousand dinars, whilst Abu al-Muzaffar brought out to him the like sum of his own moneys, so that a great heap of coin was collected for the ape. Then they fared on till they reached Bassorah-city where their friends came out to meet them; and when they had landed the Shaykh said, "Where is Abu Mohammed Lazybones?" The news reached my mother, who came to me as I lay asleep and said to me, "O my son, verily the Shaykh Abu al-Muzaffar hath come back and is now in the city; so rise and go thou to him and salute him and enquire what he hath brought thee; it may be Allah Almighty hath opened to thee the door of fortune and somewhat." Quoth I, "Lift me from the ground and prop me up, whilst I go forth and walk to the river-bank." After which I went out and walked on, stumbling over my skirts, till I met the Shaykh, who exclaimed at sight of me, "Welcome to him whose money hath been the means of my release and that of these merchants, by the will of Almighty Allah." Then he continued, "Take this monkey I bought for thee and carry him home and wait till I come to thee." So I took the ape and went off, saying in my mind, "By Allah, this is naught but rare merchandise!" and led it home, where I said to my mother, "Whenever I lie down to sleep, thou biddest me rise and trade; see now this merchandise with thine own eyes." Then I sat me down and as I sat, up came the slaves of Abu al-Muzaffar and said to me, "Art thou Abu Mohammed Lazybones?" "Yes," answered I: and behold, Abu al-Muzaffar appeared behind them. So I rose up to him and kissed his hands; and he said, "Come with me to my home." "Hearkening and obedience," answered I, and accompanied him to his house, where he bade his servants bring me what money the monkey had earned for me. So they brought it, and he said to me, "O my son, Allah hath blessed thee with this wealth by way of profit on thy five dirhams." Then the slaves set down their treasure in chests, which they had carried on their heads, and Abu al-Muzaffar gave me the keys saying, "Go before the slaves to thy house; for in sooth all this wealth is thine." So I returned to my mother, who rejoiced in this and said to me, "O my son, Allah hath blessed thee with all these riches; so put off thy laziness and go down to the bazar and sell and buy." At once I shook off my dull sloth, and opened a shop in the bazar, where the ape used to sit on the same diwan with me, eating with me when I ate and drinking when I drank. But, every day, he was absent from dawn till noon, when he came back bringing with him a purse of a thousand dinars, which he laid by my side, and sat down; and he ceased not so doing for a great while, till I amassed much wealth, wherewith, O Commander of the Faithful, I purchased houses and lands, and I planted gardens and I bought me white slaves and negroes and concubines. It came to pass one day, as I sat in my shop, with the ape sitting at my side on the same carpet, behold, he began to turn right and left, and I said to myself, "What aileth the beast?" Then Allah made the ape speak with a ready tongue, and he said to me, "O Abu Mohammed!" Now when I heard him speak, I was sore afraid; but he said to me, "Fear not; I will tell thee my case. I am a Marid of the Jinn and came to thee because of thy poor estate; but to-day thou knowest not the amount of thy wealth; and now I have need of thee, and if thou do my will it shall be well for thee." I asked, "What is it?" and he answered, "I have a mind to marry thee to a girl like the full moon." Quoth I, "How so?" and quoth he, "To-morrow don thou thy richest dress and mount thy mule, with the saddle of gold, and ride to the Haymarket. There enquire for the shop of the Sharif¹ and sit down beside him and say to him:—I come to thee as a suitor craving thy daughter's hand. If he say to thee:—Thou hast neither cash nor rank nor family, pull out a thousand dinars and give them to him, and if he ask more, give him more and tempt him with money." Whereto I replied, "To hear is to obey; I will do thy bidding, Inshallah!" Accordingly, next morning I donned my richest clothes, mounted my she-mule with trappings of gold and rode to the Haymarket, where I asked for the Sharif's shop, and finding him there seated, alighted and saluted him and seated myself beside him,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abu Mohammed Lazybones continued:—So I alighted and saluting him, seated myself beside him, and my Mamelukes and negro-slaves stood before me. Said the Sharif, "Haply thou hast some business with us which we may have pleasure of transacting?" Replied I, "Yes, I have business with thee." Asked

¹ i.e., a descendant of Mohammed in general and especially through Husayn Ali-son. Here the text notes that the chief of the bazar was of this now innumerable stock, who inherit the title through the mother as well as through the father.

he, "And what is it?" and I answered, "I come to thee as a suitor for thy daughter's hand." So he said, "Thou hast neither cash, nor rank, nor family"; whereupon I pulled him out a purse of a thousand dinars, red gold, and said to him, "This is my rank¹ and my family; and he (whom Allah bless and keep!) hath said:—The best of ranks is wealth:—And how well quoth the poet:—

Whoso two dirhams hath, his lips hath learnt * Speech of all kinds with eloquence bedight :

Draw near² his brethren and crave ear of him, * And him thou seest aught in pride-full light :

Were't not for dirhams wherein glories he, * Hadst found him 'mid mankind in sorry plight.

When richard errs in words, they all reply, * "Sooth thou hast spoken and hast said aright!"

When pauper speaketh truly, all reply * "Thou liest"; and they hold his sayings light.³

Verily dirhams in earth's every stead * Clothe men with rank and make them fair to sight ;

Gold is the very tongue of eloquence ; * Gold is the best of arms for wight who'd fight !"

Now when the Sharif heard these my words and understood my verse, he bowed his head awhile ground-wards, then raising it, said, "If it must be so, I will have of thee other three thousand gold pieces." "I hear and I obey," answered I, and sent one of my Mamelukes home for the money. As soon as he came back with it, I handed it to the Sharif who, when he saw it in his hands, rose and bidding his servants shut his shop, invited his brother merchants of the bazar to the wedding; after which he carried me to his house and wrote out my contract of marriage with his daughter, saying to me, "After ten days I will bring thee to pay her the first visit." So I went home rejoicing and shutting myself up with the ape, told him what had passed; and he said, "Thou hast done well." When the time appointed by the Sharif drew near, the ape said to me, "There is a thing I would have thee do for me; and thou shalt have of me (when it is done) whatso thou wilt." I asked, "What is that?" and he answered, "At the upper end of the chamber

1 Arab. "Hasab" (=quantity), the honour a man acquires for himself; opposed to "Nasab" (genealogy), honours inherited from ancestry: the Arabic well expresses my old motto (adopted by Chinese Gordon):—

Honour, not Honours.

2 Note the difference between "Takaddum" (=standing in presence of also superiority in excellence) and "Takádum" (priority in time).

3 Lane (ii. 427) gives a pleasant Eastern illustration of this saying wherein thou shalt meet thy bride, the Sharif's daughter, stands a cabinet, on whose door is a ring-padlock of copper and the keys under it. Take the keys and open the cabinet in which thou shalt find a coffer of iron with four flags, which are talismans, at its corners; and in its midst stands a brazen basin full of money, wherein is tied a white cock with a cleft comb; while on one side of the coffer are eleven serpents and on the other a knife. Take the knife and slaughter the cock; cut away the flags and upset the chest, then go back to the bride and do away her virginity. This is what I have to ask of thee." "Hearkening and obedience," answered I, and betook myself to the house of the Sharif. So as soon as I entered the bride-chamber, I looked for the cabinet and found it even as the ape had described it. Then I went in unto the bride and marvelled at her beauty and loveliness, and stature and symmetrical grace, for indeed they were such as no tongue can set forth. I rejoiced in her with exceeding joy; and in the middle of the night, when my bride slept, I rose, and taking the keys opened the cabinet. Then I seized the knife and slew the cock, and threw down the flags and upset the coffer; whereupon the girl awoke and, seeing the closet open and the cock with cut throat, exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! The Marid hath got hold of me!" Hardly had she made an end of speaking when the Marid swooped down upon the house and, snatching up the bride, flew away with her; whereupon there arose a mighty clamour and, behold, in came the Sharif, buffeting his face and crying, "O Abu Mohammed, what is this deed thou hast done? Is it thus thou requitest us? I made this talisman in the cabinet, fearing for my daughter from this accursed one, who for these six years hath sought to steal away the girl, but could not. But now there is no more abiding for thee with us; so wend thy ways." Thereupon I went forth and returned to my own house, where I made search for the ape but could not find him nor any trace of him; whereby I knew that it was he who was the Marid, and that he had carried off my wife and had tricked me into destroying the talisman and the cock, the two things which hindered him from taking her, and I repented, rending my raiment and cuffing my face. And there was no land but was straitened upon me; so I made for the desert forthright and ceased not wandering on till night overtook me, for I knew not whither I was going. And whilst I was deep in sad thought behold, I met two serpents, one tawny and the other white, and they were fighting to kill each other. So I took up a stone and with one cast slew the tawny serpent, which was the aggressor; whereupon the white serpent glided away and was absent for a while, but presently she returned accompanied by ten other white serpents which glided up to the dead serpent and tore her in pieces, so that only the head was left. Then they went their ways and I fell prostrate for weariness on the ground where I stood; but as I lay, pondering my case lo! I heard a Voice though I saw no one and the Voice versified with these two couplets:—

Let Fate with slackened bridle fare her pace, * Nor pass the night with mind which cares an ace.

Between eye-closing and its opening, * Allah can foulest change to fairest case.

Now when I heard this, O Commander of the Faithful, great concern gat hold of me and I was beyond measure troubled; and behold, I heard a Voice from behind me extemporise these couplets:—

O Moslem! thou whose guide is Alcorán, * Joy in what brought safe peace to thee, O man.

Fear not what Satan haply whispered thee, * And in us see a Truth-believing clan.

Then said I, "I conjure thee, by the truth of Him thou worshippest, let me know who thou art!" Thereupon the Invisible Speaker assumed the form of a man and said, "Fear not; for the report of thy good deed hath reached us, and we are a people of the true-believing Jinn. So, if thou lack aught, let us know it, that we may have the pleasure of fulfilling thy want." Quoth I, "Indeed I am in sore need, for I am afflicted with a grievous affliction and no one was ever afflicted as I am!" Quoth he, "Perchance thou art Abu Mohammed Lazybones?" and I replied, "Yes." He rejoined, "I, O Abu Mohammed, am the brother of the white serpent, whose foe thou slewest; we are four brothers by one father and mother, and we are all indebted to thee for thy kindness. And know thou that he who played this trick on thee in the likeness of an ape is a Marid of the Marids of the Jinn; and had he not used this artifice, he had never been able to get the girl; for he hath loved her and had a mind to take her this long while, but he was hindered by that talisman; and had it remained as it was, he could never have found access to her. However, fret not thyself for that; we will bring thee to her and kill the Marid; for thy kindness is not lost upon us."

Then he cried out with a terrible outcry—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Ifrit continued, "Verily thy kindness is not lost upon us." Then he cried out with a terrible outcry in a horrible voice, and behold, there appeared a troop of the Jinn, of whom he enquired concerning the ape; and one of them said, "I know his abiding-place"; and the other asked "Where abideth he?" Said the speaker, "He is in the City of Brass, whereon sun riseth not." Then said the first Jinni to me, "O Abu Mohammed, take one of these our slaves, and he will carry thee on his back and teach thee how thou shalt get back the girl; but know that this slave is a Marid of the Marids and beware, whilst he is carrying thee, lest thou utter the name of Allah, or he will flee from thee and thou wilt fall and be destroyed." "I hear and obey," answered I, and chose out one of the slaves, who bent down and said to me, "Mount." So I mounted on his back, and he flew up with me into the firmament, till I lost sight of the earth and saw the stars as they were the mountains of earth fixed and firm¹ and heard the angels crying, "Praise be to Allah," in heaven while the Marid held me in converse, diverting me and hindering me from pronouncing the name of Almighty Allah.² But as we flew, behold, one clad in green raiment,³ with streaming tresses and radiant face, holding in his hand a javelin whence flew sparks of fire, accosted me, saying, "O Abu Mohammed, say:—"There is no god but the God and Mohammed is the Apostle of God; or I will smite thee with this javelin." Now already I felt heart-broken by my forced silence as regards calling on the name of Allah; so I said, "There is no god but the God, and Mohammed is the Apostle of God."

1 A Koranic fancy; the mountains being the pegs which keep the earth in place. "And he hath thrown before the earth mountains firmly rooted, lest it should move with you." (Koran, chapt. xvi.) The earth when first created was smooth and thereby liable to a circular motion, like the celestial orbs; and, when the Angels asked who could stand on so tottering a frame, Allah fixed it the next morning by throwing the mountains upon it and pegging them down. A fair prolepsis of the Neptunian theory.

2 Easy enough for an Englishman to avoid saying "by God," but this common incident in Moslem folk-lore appeals to the peoples who are constantly using the word Allah, Wallah, Billah, etc. The Koran expressly says, "Make not Allah the scope (object, lit. arrow-butt) of your oaths" (chapt. ii. 224); yet the command is broken every minute.

3 This must be the ubiquitous Khizr, the Green Prophet; when Ali appears, as a rule he is on horseback.

No. 23.

Abu Mohammed hight Lazybones⁴⁹²

"So I mounted on his back, and he flew up with me into the firmament. . . . But as we flew, behold! one clad in green raiment, with streaming tresses and radiant face, holding in his hand a javelin whence flew sparks of fire, accosted me."

“none by the way,” he answered, “get!”

“get?” he said, “and did no business at all?”
 “get?” he said, “and did no business at all?”
 “get?” he said, “and did no business at all?”
 “get?” he said, “and did no business at all?”
 “get?” he said, “and did no business at all?”

Whereupon the shining One smote the Marid with his javelin and he melted away and became ashes; whilst I was thrown from his back and fell headlong towards the earth, till I dropped into the midst of a dashing sea, swollen with clashing surge. And behold, I fell hard by a ship with five sailors therein, who seeing me made for me and took me up into the vessel; and they began to speak to me in some speech I knew not; but I signed to them that I understood not their speech. So they fared on till the last of the day, when they cast out a net and caught a great fish and they broiled it and gave me to eat; after which they ceased not sailing on till they reached their city and carried me to their King and set me in his presence. So I kissed ground before him, and he bestowed on me a dress of honour and said to me in Arabic (which he knew well), "I appoint thee one of my officers." Thereupon I asked him the name of the city, and he replied, "It is called Hanád¹ and is in the land of China." Then he committed me to his Wazir, bidding him show me the city, which was formerly peopled by Infidels, till Almighty Allah turned them into stones; and there I abode a month's space, diverting myself with viewing the place, nor saw I ever greater plenty of trees and fruits than there. And when this time had past, one day, as I sat on the bank of a river, behold, there accosted me a horseman, who said to me, "Art thou not Abu Mohammed' Lazybones?" "Yes," answered I; whereupon he said, "Fear not, for the report of thy good deed hath reached us." Asked I, "Who art thou?" and he answered, "I am a brother of the white serpent, and thou art hard by the place where is the damsel whom thou seekest." So saying, he took off his clothes and clad me therein, saying, "Fear not, for the slave who perished under thee was one of our slaves." Then the horseman took me up behind him and rode on with me to a desert place, when he said, "Dismount now and walk on between these two mountains, till thou seest the City of Brass²; then halt afar off and enter it not,

1 The name is apparently imaginary; and a little below we find that it was close to Jinn-land. China was very convenient for this purpose: the medieval Moslems, who settled in considerable numbers at Canton and elsewhere, knew just enough of it to know their own ignorance of the vast dominion. Hence the Druzes of the Libanus still hold that part of their nation is in the depths of the Celestial Empire.

2 I am unwilling to alter the old title to "City of Copper," as it should be; the pure metal having been technologically used long before the alloy of copper and zinc. But the Maroccan City (night dlavi. et. seq.) was of brass (not copper). The Hindus of Upper India have an Iram which they call Hari Chand's city (Colonel Tod); and I need hardly mention the Fata Morgana, Island of Saint Borondon; Cape Fly-away; the Flying Dutchman etc., etc., all the effect of "looming."

ere I return to thee and tell thee how thou shalt do." "To hear is to obey," replied I and dismounting from behind him, walked on till I came to the city, the walls whereof I found of brass. Then I began to pace round about it, hoping to find a gate, but found none; and presently as I persevered, behold, the serpent's brother rejoined me and gave me a charmed sword which should hinder any from seeing me,¹ then went his way. Now he had been gone but a little while, when lo, I heard a noise of cries and found myself in the midst of a multitude of folk whose eyes were in their breasts; and seeing me, quoth they, "Who art thou and what cast thee into this place?" So I told them my story, and they said, "The girl thou seekest is in this city with the Marid; but we know not what he hath done with her. Now we are brethren of the white serpent," adding, "Go thou to yonder spring and note where the water entereth, and enter thou with it; for it will bring thee into the city." I did as they bade me, and followed the water-course, till it brought me to a Sardáb, a vaulted room under the earth, whereupon I ascended and found myself in the midst of the city. Here I saw the damsel seated upon a throne of gold, under a canopy of brocade, girt round by a garden full of trees of gold, whose fruits were jewels of price, such as rubies and chrysolites, pearls and coral. And the moment she saw me she knew me and accosted me with the Moslem salutation, saying, "O my lord, who guided thee hither?" So I told her all that had passed, and she said, "Know that the accursed Marid, of the greatness of his love for me, hath told me what bringeth him bane and what bringeth him gain; and that there is here a talisman by means whereof he could, an he would, destroy the city and all that are therein; and whoso possesseth it, the Ifrits will do his commandment in everything. It standeth upon a pillar."—Whereat I asked her, "And where is the pillar?" and she answered, "It is in such a place." "And what manner of thing may the talisman be?" said I: said she, "It is in the semblance of a vulture² and upon it is a writing which I cannot read. So ¹ This sword which makes men invisible and which takes place of Siegfried's Tarnkappe (invisible cloak) and of "Fortunatus' cap" is common in Moslem folk-lore. The idea probably arose from the venerable practice of inscribing the blades with sentences, verses and magic figures.

² Arab. "'Ukáb," in books an eagle (especially black) and P. N. of constellation but in pop. usage = a vulture. In Egypt it is the Neophron Percnopterus (Jerdon) or N. Gingianus (Latham), the Dijáat Far'aun or Pharaoh's hen. This bird has been known to kill the Báshah sparrow-hawk (Jerdon, i. 60); yet, curious to say, the reviewers of my "Falconry in the Valley go thou thither and seize it, and set it before thee and taking a chafing-dish, throw into it a little musk, whereupon there will arise a smoke which will draw the Ifrits to thee, and they will all present themselves before thee, nor shall one be absent; also they shall be subject to thy word and, whatsoever thou biddest them, that will they do. Arise therefore and fall to this thing with the blessing of Almighty Allah." I answered, "Hearkening and obedience"; and going to the column did as she bade me, whereupon the Ifrits all presented themselves before me, saying, "Here are we, O our lord! Whatsoever thou biddest us, that will we do." Quoth I, "Bind the Marid who brought the damsel hither from her home." Quoth they, "We hear and obey"; and off they flew and bound that Marid in straitest bonds and returned after a while, saying, "We have done thy bidding." Then I dismissed them, and repairing to my wife told her what had happened, and said to her, "O my bride, wilt thou go with me?" "Yes," answered she. So I carried her forth of the vaulted chamber whereby I had entered the city and we fared on till we fell in with the folk who had shown me the way to find her.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that he continued on this wise:—And we fared on till we fell in with the folk who had shown me the way to her. So I said to them, "Point me out a path which shall lead me to my home"; and they did accordingly, and brought us a-foot to the seashore and set us aboard a vessel which sailed on before us with a fair wind till we reached Bassorah-city. And when we entered the house of my father-in-law and her people saw my wife, they rejoiced with exceeding joy. Then I fumigated the vulture with musk and lo, the Ifrits flocked to me from all sides, saying, "At thy service; what wilt thou have us do?" So I bade them transport all that was in the City of Brass of moneys and noble metals and stones of price to my

of the Indus" questioned the fact, known to so many travellers, that the falcon is also killed by this "tiger of the air," despite the latter's feeble bill (pp. 35-38). I was faring badly at their hands when the late Mr. Burckhardt Barker came to the rescue. Falconicide is popularly attributed, not only to the vulture, but also to the crestless hawk-eagle (Nisætus Bonelli) which the Hindus call Morángá=peacock-slayer.

house in Bassorah, which they did; and I then ordered them to bring me the ape. They brought him before me, abject and contemptible, and I said to him, "O accursed, why hast thou dealt thus perfidiously with me?" Then I commanded the Ifrits to shut him in a brazen vessel¹; so they put him in a brazen cucurbite and sealed it with lead. But I abode with my wife in joy and delight; and now, O Commander of the Faithful, I have under my hand precious things in such measure and rare jewels and other treasure and moneys on such wise as neither reckoning may express nor may limits comprise; and if thou lust after wealth or aught else I will command the Jinn at once to do thy desire. But all this is of the bounty of Almighty Allah. Thereupon the Commander of the Faithful wondered greatly and bestowed on him imperial gifts, in exchange for his presents, and entreated him with the favour he deserved. And men also tell the tale of the

GENEROUS DEALING OF YAHYA BIN KHALID THE BARMECIDE WITH MANSUR.

It is told that Harun al-Rashid, in the days before he became jealous of the Barmecides, sent once for one of his guards, Sálîh by name, and said to him, "O Salih, go to Mansur² and say to him:—Thou owest us a thousand thousand dirhams and we require of thee immediate payment of this amount. And I command thee, O Salih, unless he pay it between this hour and sundown, sever his head from his body and bring it to me." "To hear is to obey," answered Salih, and going to Mansur acquainted him with what the Caliph had said; whereupon quoth he, "I am a lost man, by Allah; for all my estate and all my hand owneth, if sold for their utmost value, would not fetch a price of more than an hundred thousand dirhams. Whence then, O Salih, shall I get the other nine hundred thousand?" Salih replied, "Contrive how thou mayst speedily acquit thyself, else thou art a dead man; for I cannot grant thee an eye-twinkling of delay after the time appointed me by the Caliph; nor can I fail of aught which the Prince of True Believers hath enjoined on me. Hasten, therefore, to devise some means of saving thyself ere the time expire." Quoth Mansur, "O Salih, I beg thee of thy favour to bring me to my house, that I may take leave of my children and family and give my kinsfolk my last injunctions." Now Salih relateth :—So I went with him to his house where he fell to bidding his family farewell, and the house was filled with a clamour of weeping and lamentations and calling for help on Almighty Allah. Thereupon I said to him, "I have bethought me that Allah may haply vouchsafe thee relief at the hands of the Barmecides. Come, let us go to the house of Yáhyá bin Khálid." So we went to Yahya's house, and Mansur told him his case whereat he was sore concerned and bowed him groundwards for a while; then raising his head, he called his treasurer and said to him, "How much have we in our treasury?" "A matter of five thousand dirhams," answered the treasurer; and Yahya bade him bring them and sent a messenger to his son, Al-Fazl, saying, "I am offered for sale a splendid estate which may never be laid waste; so send me somewhat of money." Al-Fazl sent him a thousand thousand dirhams, and he despatched a messenger with a like message to his son Ja'afar, saying, "We have a matter of much moment and for it we want money"; whereupon Ja'afar at once sent him a thousand thousand dirhams; nor did Yahya leave sending to his kinsmen of the Barmecides, till he had collected from them a great sum of money for Mansur. But Salih and the debtor knew not of this; and Mansur said to Yahya, "O my lord, I have laid hold upon thy skirt, for I know not whither to look for the money but to thee, in accordance with thy wonted generosity; so discharge thou the rest of my debt for me and make me thy freed slave." Thereupon Yahya hung down his head and wept; then he said to a page, "Harkye, boy, the Commander of the Faithful gave our slave-girl Dananir a jewel of great price: go thou to her and bid her send it to us." The page went out and presently returned with the jewel, whereupon quoth Yahya, "O Mansur, I bought this jewel of the merchant for the Commander of the Faithful, at a price of two hundred thousand dinars,¹ and he gave it to our slave-girl Dananir, the lute-player; and when he sees it with thee, he will know it and spare thy blood and do thee honour for our sake; and now, O Mansur, verily thy money is complete." (Salih continued) So I took the money and the jewel and carried them to Al-Rashid together with Mansur, but on the way I heard him repeat this couplet, applying it to his own case :—

¹ Here I translate "Nahás"=brass; as the "kumkum" (cucurbite) is made of mixed metal, not of copper.

² Mansur al-Nimrí, a poet of the time and a protégé of Yahya's son, Al-Fazl.

¹ This was at least four times Mansur's debt.

'Twas not of love that fared my feet to them ; * 'Twas that I feared me lest they shoot their shafts !

Now when I heard this I marvelled at his evil nature and his depravity and mischief-making and his ignoble birth and provenance and, turning upon him, I said, " There is none on the face of the earth better or more righteous than the Barmecides, nor any baser nor more wrongous than thou ; for they bought thee off from death and delivered thee from destruction, giving thee what should save thee ; yet thou thankest them not nor praisest them, neither acquittest thee after the manner of the noble ; nay, thou meetest their benevolence with this speech." Then I went to Al-Rashid and acquainted him with all that had passed—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Salih continued :—So I acquainted the Commander of the Faithful with all that passed and Al-Rashid marvelled at the generosity and benevolence of Yahya and the vileness and ingratitude of Mansur and bade restore the jewel to Yahya, saying, " Whatso we have given it besitteth us not to take again." After that Salih returned to Yahya, and acquainted him with the tale of Mansur and his ill-conduct ; whereupon replied he, " O Salih, when a man is in want, sick at heart and sad of thought, he is not to be blamed for aught that falleth from him ; for it cometh not from the heart " ; and on this wise he took to seeking excuse for Mansur. But Salih wept and exclaimed, " Never shall the revolving heavens bring forth into being the like of thee, O Yahya ! Alas, and well-away, that one of such noble nature and generosity should be laid in the dust ! " And he repeated these two couplets :—

Haste to do kindness thou dost intend ; * Thou canst not always on boons expend :

How many from bounty themselves withheld, * Till means of bounty had come to end !¹

And men tell another tale of the

¹ See p. 307[—] post.

GENEROUS DEALING OF YAHYA SON OF KHALID WITH A MAN WHO FORGED A LETTER IN HIS NAME.

THERE was between Yahyá bin Khálid and Abdullah bin Máhk al-Khuzá'i¹ an enmity which they kept secret; the reason of the hatred being that Harun al-Rashid loved Abdullah with exceeding love, so that Yahya and his sons were wont to say that he had bewitched the Commander of the Faithful. And thus they abode a long while, with rancour in their hearts, till it fell out that the Caliph invested Abdullah with the government of Armenia² and despatched him thither. Now soon after he had settled himself in his seat of government, there came to him one of the people of Irak, a man of good breeding and excellent parts and abundant cleverness; but he had lost his money and wasted his wealth and his estate was come to ill case; so he forged a letter to Abdullah bin Malik in the name of Yahya bin Khalid and set out there-with for Armenia. Now when he came to the Governor's gate he gave the letter to one of the Chamberlains, who took it and carried it to his master. Abdullah opened it and read it, and considering it attentively knew it to be forged; so he sent for the man, who presented himself before him and called down blessings upon him and praised him and those of his court. Quoth Abdullah to him, "What moved thee to weary thyself on this wise and bring me a forged letter? But be of good heart for we will not disappoint thy travail." Replied the other, "Allah prolong the life of our lord the Wazir! If my coming annoy thee, cast not about for a pretext to repel me, for Allah's earth is wide and He who giveth daily bread still liveth. Indeed, the letter I bring thee from Yahya bin Khalid is true and no forgery." Quoth Abdullah, "I will write a writ to my agent³ at Baghdad and command him

1 Intendant of the Palace to Harun al-Rashid. The Bres Edit (vii. 254) begins, "They tell that there arose full enmity between Ja'afar Barmecide and a Sahib of Misr" (Wazir or Governor of Egypt). Lane (ii 429) quotes to this purpose amongst Arab historians Fakhr al-Din (De Sacy's Chrestomathie Arabe, i. p. 26, edit. ii.).

2 Arab. "Armaniyah"; which Egyptians call after their mincing fashion "Irminiyeh," hence "Ermine" (Mus. Ponticus) Armaniyah was much more extensive than our Armenia, now degraded to a mere province of Turkey, and the term is understood to include the whole of the old Parthian Empire.

3 Even now each Pasha-governor must keep a "Wakíl" in Constantinople to intrigue and bribe for him at head-quarters.

enquire concerning this same letter. If it be true, as they sayest, and genuine and not forged by thee, I will bestow on thee the Emir-ship of one of my cities ; or, if thou prefer a present, I will give thee two hundred thousand dirhams, besides horses and camels of price and a robe of honour. But, if the letter prove a forgery, I will order thou be beaten with two hundred blows of a stick and thy beard be shaven." So Abdullah bade confine him in a chamber and furnish him therein with all he needed, till his case should be made manifest. Then he despatched a letter to his agent at Baghdad, to the following effect :—"There is come to me a man with a letter purporting to be from Yahya bin Khalid. Now I have my suspicions of this letter : therefore delay thou not in the matter, but go thyself and look carefully into the case and let me have an answer with all speed, in order that we may know what is true and what is untrue." When the letter reached Baghdad, the agent mounted at once——And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the agent of Abdullah son of Malik al-Khuza'i, on receipt of the letter at Baghdad, mounted at once and repaired to the house of Yahya bin Khalid, whom he found sitting with his officers and boon-companions. After the usual salute he gave him the letter and Yahya read it and said to the agent, "Come back to me to-morrow for my written answer." Now when the agent had gone away, Yahya turned to his companions and said, "What doth he deserve who forgeth a letter in my name and carrieth it to my foe?" They answered all and each, saying this and that, and every one proposing some kind of punishment ; but Yahya said, "Ye err in that ye say and this your counsel is of the baseness of your spirits and the meanness of your minds. Ye all know the close favour of Abdullah with the Caliph and ye weet of what is between him and us of anger and enmity ; and now Almighty Allah hath made this man the means of reconciliation between us ; and hath fitted him for such purpose and hath appointed him to quench the fire of ire in our hearts, which hath been growing these twenty years ; and by his means our differences shall be adjusted. Wherefore it behoveth me to requite such man by verifying his assertion and amending his estate ; so I will write him a letter to Abdullah son of Malik, praying that he may use him with increase of honour and continue to him his liberality." Now when his companions heard what he said, they called down blessings on him and marvelled at his generosity and the greatness of his magnanimity. Then he called for paper and ink and wrote Abdullah a letter in his own hand to the following effect :—"In the name of Allah the Compassionating, the Compassionate ! Of a truth thy letter hath reached me (Allah give thee long life !) and I am glad to hear of thy safety and am pleased to be assured of thine immunity and prosperity. It was thy thought that a certain worthy man had forged a letter in my name and that he was not the bearer of any message from the same ; but the case is not so, for the letter I myself wrote, and it was no forgery ; and I hope, of thy courtesy and consideration and the nobility of thy nature, that thou wilt gratify this generous and excellent man of his hope and wish, and honour him with the honour he deserveth and bring him to his desire and make him the special object of thy favour and munificence. Whatso thou dost with him, it is to me that thou dost the kindness, and I am thankful to thee accordingly." Then he superscribed the letter and after sealing it delivered it to the agent, who despatched it to Abdullah. Now when the Governor read it, he was charmed with its contents, and sending for the man, said to him, " Whichever of the two promised boons is the more acceptable to thee that will I give thee." The man replied, " The money gift were more acceptable to me than aught else," whereupon Abdullah ordered him two hundred thousand dirhams and ten Arab horses, five with housings of silk and other five with richly ornamented saddles, used in state processions ; besides twenty chests of clothes and ten mounted white slaves and a proportionate quantity of jewels of price. Moreover, he bestowed on him a dress of honour and sent him to Baghdad in great splendour. So when he came thither he repaired to the door of Yahya's house before he went to his own folk, and craved permission to enter and have audience. The Chamberlain went in to Yahya and said to him, " O my lord, there is one at the door who craveth speech of thee ; and he is a man of apparent wealth, courteous in manner, comely of aspect, and attended by many servants." Then Yahya bade admit him ; and, when he entered and kissed ground before him, Yahya asked him, " Who art thou ? " He answered, " Hear me, O my lord, I am he who was done dead by the tyranny of fortune, but thou didst raise me to life again from the grave of calamities and exalt me to the paradise of my desires. I am the man who forged a letter in thy name and carried it to Abdullah bin Malik al-Khuza'i." Yahya asked, " How hath he dealt with thee and what did he give thee?" and the man answered, "He hath given me, thanks to thy hand and thy great liberality and benevolence and to thy comprehensive kindness and lofty magnanimity and thine all-embracing generosity, that which hath made me a wealthy man, and he hath distinguished me with his gifts and favours. And now I have brought all that he gave me and here it is at thy door; for it is thine to decide and the command is in thy hand." Rejoined Yahya, "Thou hast done me better service than I did thee, and I owe thee a heavy debt of gratitude and every gift the white hand¹ can give, for that thou hast changed into love and amity the hate and enmity that were between me and a man whom I respect and esteem. Wherefore I will give thee the like of what Abdullah bin Malik gave thee." Then he ordered him money and horses and chests of apparel, such as Abdullah had given him; and thus that man's fortune was restored to him by the munificence of these two generous ones. And folk also relate the tale of the

CALIPH AL-MAAMUN AND THE STRANGE SCHOLAR.

IT is said of Al-Maamun that among the Caliphs of the house of Abbas there was none more accomplished in all branches of knowledge than he. Now on two days in each week, he was wont to preside at conferences of the learned, when the lawyers and theologians disputed in his presence, each sitting in his several rank and room. One day as he sat thus, there came into the assembly a stranger, clad in ragged white clothes, who took seat in an obscure place behind the doctors of the law. Then the assembly began to speak and debate difficult questions, it being the custom that the various propositions should be submitted to each in turn, and that whoso bethought him of some subtle addition or rare conceit should make mention of it. So the question went round till it came to the strange man, who spake in his turn and made a goodlier answer than any of the doctors' replies; and the Caliph approved his speech.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The symbol of generosity, of unasked liberality, the "black hand" being that of niggardness

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Caliph Al-Maamun approved his speech and ordered him to come up from his low place to a high stead. Now when the second question came to him, he made a still more notable answer, and Al-Maamun ordered him to be preferred to a yet higher seat; and when the third question reached him, he made answer more justly and appropriately than on the two previous occasions, and Al-Maamun bade him come up and sit near himself. Presently the discussion ended, when water was brought and they washed their hands; after which food was set on and they ate; and the doctors arose and withdrew; but Al-Maamun forbade the stranger to depart with them, and calling him to himself treated him with special favour and promised him honour and profit. Thereupon they made ready the séance of wassail; the fair-faced cup-companions came and the pure wine¹ went round amongst them, till the cup came to the stranger, who rose to his feet and spake thus: "If the Commander of the Faithful permit me, I will say one word." Answered the Caliph, "Say what thou wilt." Quoth the man, "Verily the Exalted Intelligence (whose eminence Allah increase!) knoweth that his slave was this day, in the august assembly, one of the unknown folk and of the meanest of the company; and the Commander of the Faithful raised his rank and brought him near to himself, little as were the wit and wisdom he displayed, preferring him above the rest and advancing him to a station and a degree whereto his thought aspired not. But now he is minded to part him from that small portion of intellect which raised him high from his lowness and made him great after his littleness. Heaven forbend and forbid that the Commander of the Faithful should envy his slave what little he hath of understanding and worth and renown! Now, if his slave should drink wine, his reason would depart far from him and ignorance draw near to him and steal away his good breeding; so would he revert to that low and contemptible degree whence he sprang, and become ridiculous and despicable in the eyes of the folk. I hope, therefore, that the August Intelligence, of his power and bounty and royal generosity and magnanimity, will not despoil his slave of this jewel." When the Caliph Al-Maamun heard his speech, he praised him and thanked him and making him sit down again in his place showed him high honour, and ordered him a present of an hundred thousand silver pieces. Moreover, he mounted him upon a horse and gave him rich apparel; and in every assembly he was wont to exalt him and show him favour over all the other doctors of law and religion till he became the highest of them all in rank. And Allah is All-knowing. Men also tell a tale of

¹ Arab "Râh" = pure (and old) wine. Arabs, like our classics, usually drank their wine tempered. So Imr al-Kays in his Mu'allakah says, "Bring the well-tempered wine, that seems to be saffron-tinctured, and when water-mixed, o'erbrims the cup" (v. 2).

ALI SHAR¹ AND ZUMURRUD.

THERE lived once in the days of yore and the good old times long gone before, in the land of Khorasan, a merchant called Majd al-Din, who had great wealth and many slaves and servants, white and black, young and old; but he had not been blessed with a child until he reached the age of threescore, when Almighty Allah vouchsafed him a son, whom he named Alí Shár. The boy grew up like the moon on the night of fulness; and when he came to man's estate and was endowed with all kinds of perfections, his father fell sick of a death-malady, and calling his son to him, said, "O my son, the fated hour of my decease is at hand, and I desire to give thee my last injunctions." He asked, "And what are they, O my father?" and he answered, "O my son, I charge thee, be not over-familiar with any² and eschew what leadeth to evil and mischief. Beware lest thou sit in company with the wicked; for he is like the blacksmith; if his fire burn thee not, his smoke shall bother thee: and how excellent is the saying of the poet³:—

¹ Lane (ii. 435) ill-advisedly writes "Sher," as "the word is evidently Persian signifying a Lion." But this is only in the debased Indian dialect; a Persian, especially a Shirazi, pronounces "Shír." And this is how it is written in the Bresl. Edit., vii. 262. "Shár" is evidently a fancy name, possibly suggested by the dynastic name of the Ghurjistan or Georgian Princes.

² Again old experience, which has learned at a heavy cost how many a goodly apple is rotten at the core.

³ This couplet has occurred in vol. i. night xxi. I give Torrens (p. 205) by way of specimen.

In thy whole world there is not one,
 Whose friendship thou may'st count upon,
 Nor plighted faith that will stand true,
 When times go hard and hopes are few,
 Then live apart and dwell alone,
 Nor make a prop of any one,
 I've given a gift in that I've said,
 Will stand thy friend in every stead.

And what another saith :—

Men are a hidden malady ; • Rely not on the sham in them :
 For perfidy and treachery • Thou'lt find, if thou examine them

And yet a third saith :—

Converse with men hath scanty weal, except • To while away the time in chat and prate :
 Then shun their intimacy, save it be • To win thee lore, or better thine estate.

And a fourth saith :—

If a sharp-witted wight e'er tried mankind, • I've eaten that which only tasted he¹ ;
 Their amity proved naught but wile and guile, • Their faith I found was but hypocrisy."

Quoth Ali, "O my father, I have heard thee and I will obey thee; what more shall I do?" Quoth he, "Do good whenas thou art able; be ever kind and courteous to men and regard as riches every occasion of doing a good turn; for a design is not always easily carried out; and how well saith the poet :—

'Tis not at every time and tide unstable, • We can do kindly acts and charitable :
 When thou art able hasten thee to act, • Lest thine endeavour prove anon unable²!"

Said Ali, "I have heard thee and I will obey thee";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the youth replied, "I have heard thee and I will obey thee; what more?" And his sire continued, "Be thou, O my son, mindful of Allah, ¹ Arab. "Zāka=merely tasting a thing which may be sweet with a bitter after-flavour.

² See p. 300, ante.

so shall He be mindful of thee. Ward thy wealth and waste it not; for an thou do, thou wilt come to want the least of mankind. Know that the measure of a man's worth is according to that which his right hand hendeth; and how well saith the poet¹:—

When fails my wealth no friend will deign befriend, * And when it waxeth all men friendship show :
How many a foe for wealth became my friend, * Wealth lost, how many a friend became a foe !”

Asked Ali, “What more ?” and Majd al-Din answered, “O my son, take council of those who are older than thou and hasten not to do thy heart's desire. Have compassion on those who are below thee, so shall those who are above thee have compassion on thee; and oppress none, lest Allah empower one who shall oppress thee. How well saith the poet :—

Add other wit to thy wit, counsel craving, * For man's true course hides not from minds of two :
Man is a mirror which but shows his face, * And by two mirrors he his back shall view.

And as saith another²:—

Act on sure grounds, nor hurry fast,
To gain the purpose that thou hast ;
And be thou kindly to all men
So kindly thou'lt be called again ;
For not a deed the hand can try,
Save 'neath the hand of God on high,
Nor tyrant harsh work tyranny,
Uncrushed by tyrant harsh as he.

And as saith yet another³:—

Tyrannize not, if thou hast the power to do so; for the tyrannical is in danger of revenges.
Thine eye will sleep while the oppressed, wakeful, will call down curses on thee, and God's eye sleepeth not.

Beware of wine-bibbing, for drink is the root of all evil; it doeth away the reason and bringeth to contempt whoso useth it; and how well saith the poet :—

By Allah, wine shall not disturb me, while my soul * Join body, nor while speech the words of me explain :

1 This tetrastich was in night xxx with a difference.

2 The lines have occurred in night xxx. I quote Torrens, p. 311.

3 This tetrastich is in night clxix. I borrow from Lane (ii. 62).

No day will I be thrall'd to wine-skin cooled by breeze¹ * Nor choose a friend save those who are of cups unfain.

This, then, is my charge to thee; bear it before thine eyes, and Allah stand to thee in my stead." Then he swooned away and kept silent awhile; and, when he came to himself, he besought pardon of Allah and pronounced the profession of the Faith, and was admitted to the mercy of the Almighty. So his son wept and lamented for him and presently made proper preparation for his burial; great and small walked in his funeral procession and Koran-readers recited Holy Writ about his bier; nor did Ali Shar omit aught of what was due to the dead. Then they prayed over him and committed him to the dust, and wrote these two couplets upon his tomb:—

Thou wast create of dust and cam'st to life, * And learned'st in eloquence to place thy trust; Anon, to dust returning, thou becamest * A corpse, as though ne'er taken from the dust.

Now his son Ali Shar grieved for him with sore grief and mourned him with the ceremonies usual among men of note; nor did he cease to weep the loss of his father till his mother died also, not long afterwards, when he did with her as he had done with his sire. Then he sat in the shop selling and buying and consorting with none of Almighty Allah's creatures, in accordance with his father's injunction. This wise he continued to do for a year, at the end of which time there came in to him by craft certain whoreson fellows and consorted with him, till he turned after their example to lewdness and swerved from the way of righteousness, drinking wine in flowing bowls and frequenting fair women night and day; for he said to himself, "Of a truth my father amassed this wealth for me, and if I spend it not, to whom shall I leave it?
By Allah, I will not do save as saith the poet:—

An through the whole of life * Thou gett'st and gain'st for self;
Say, when shalt thou enjoy * Thy gains and gotten self?"

And Ali Shar ceased not to waste his wealth all whiles of the day and all watches of the night, till he had made away with the whole of his riches and abode in pauper case and troubled at heart. So he sold his shop and lands and so forth, and after this he sold the clothes off his body, leaving himself but one suit; and, as drunkenness quitted him and thoughtfulness came to him, he fell

¹ The rude but effective refrigerator of the desert Arab, who hangs his water-skin to the branch of a tree and allows it to swing in the wind.

into grief and sore care. One day, when he had sat from day-break to mid-afternoon without breaking his fast, he said in his mind, "I will go round to those on whom I spent my moneys; perchance one of them will feed me this day." So he went the round of them all; but as often as he knocked at anyone's door of them the man denied himself, and hid from him till his stomach ached with hunger. Then he betook himself to the bazar of the merchants—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Tenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ali Shar, feeling his stomach ache with hunger, betook himself to the merchants' bazar, where he found a crowd of people assembled in ring, and said to himself, "I wonder what causeth these folk to crowd together thus? By Allah, I will not budge hence till I see what is within yonder ring!" So he made his way into the ring and found therein a damsel exposed for sale who was five feet tall,¹ beautifully proportioned, rosy of cheek, and high of breast; and who surpassed all the people of her time in beauty and loveliness and elegance and grace; even as saith one, describing her:—

As she willèd she was made, and in such a way that when * She was east in Nature's mould neither short nor long was she:

Beauty woke to fall in love with the beauties of her form, * Where combine with all her coyness her pride and pudency:

The full moon is her face² and the branchlet is her shape, * And the musk-pod is her scent—what like her can there be?

'Tis as though she were moulded from water of the pearl, * And in every lovely limblet another moon we see!

1 Arab. "Khumásiyah," which Lane (ii. 438) renders "of quinary stature." Usually it means five spans, but here five feet, showing that the girl was young and still growing. The invoice with a slave always notes her height in spans measured from ankle-bone to ear, and above seven she loses value as being full grown. Hence Sudási (fern Sudásiyah) is a slave six spans high, the Shibr or full span (9 inches) not the Fitr or short span from thumb to index. Faut is the interval between every finger; Ratab between index and medius, and Atab between medius and annularis.

2 "Moon-faced" now sounds sufficiently absurd to us, but it was not always so. Solomon (Cant. vi. 10) does not disdain the image "fair as the moon, clear as the sun"; and those who have seen a moon in the sky of Arabia will thoroughly appreciate it. We find it amongst the Hindus, the Persians, the Afghans, the Turks and all the nations of Europe, and we have, finally, the grand example of Spenser:—

Her spacious forehead, like the clearest moon, etc.

And her name was Zumurrud—the Smaragdine. So when Ali Shar saw her he marvelled at her beauty and grace and said, “By Allah, I will not stir hence till I see how much this girl fetcheth, and know who buyeth her!” So he took standing-place amongst the merchants, and they thought he had a mind to buy her, knowing the wealth he had inherited from his parents. Then the broker stood at the damsel’s head and said, “Ho, merchants! Ho, ye men of money! Who will open the gate of biddings for this damsel, the mistress of moons, the union pearl, Zumurrud the curtain-maker, the sought of the seeker, and the delight of the desirous? Open the biddings’ door and on the opener be nor blame nor reproach for evermore.” Thereupon quoth one merchant, “Mine for five hundred dinars”; “and ten,” quoth another. “Six hundred,” cried an old man named Rashid al-Din, blue of eye¹ and foul of face. “And ten,” cried another. “I bid a thousand,” rejoined Rashid al-Din; whereupon the rival merchants were tongue-tied and held their peace, and the broker took counsel with the girl’s owner, who said, “I have sworn not to sell her save to whom she shall choose; so consult her.” Thereupon the broker went up to Zumurrud and said to her, “O mistress of moons, this merchant hath a mind to buy thee.” She looked at Rashid al-Din, and finding him as we have said, replied, “I will not be sold to a grey-beard, whom decrepitude hath brought to such evil plight. Allah inspired his saying who saith:—

I craved of her a kiss one day; but soon as she beheld * My hoary hairs, though I my luxuries and wealth display’d,
She proudly turned away from me, showed shoulders, cried aloud:— *
‘No! no! by Him, whose hest mankind from nothingness hath made,
For hoary head and grizzled chin I’ve no especial love: * What! stuff my mouth with cotton² ere in sepulchre I’m laid?’”

Now when the broker heard her words he said, “By Allah, thou art excusable, and thy price is ten thousand gold pieces!” So he told her owner that she would not accept of old man Rashid al-Din, and he said, “Consult her concerning another.” Thereupon a second man came forward and said, “Be she mine for what price was offered by the oldster she would have none of”; but she looked at him, and seeing that his beard was dyed, said, “What be

¹ Blue eyes have a bad name in Arabia as in India; the witch Zarká of Al-Yamamah was noted for them; and “blue-eyed” often means “fierce-eyed,” alluding to the Greeks and Daylamites, mortal enemies to Ishm.el. The Arabs say “ruddy of mustachio, blue of eye, and black of heart.”

² Before explained as used with camphor to fill the dead man’s mouth.

this fashion lewd and base and the blackening of the hoary face?" And she made a great show of wonderment and repeated these couplets:—

Showed me Sir Such-an-one a sight and what a frightful sight! * A neck, by Allah, only made for slipper-sole to smite¹:
 A beard the meetest racing-ground where gnats and lice contend, * A brow fit only for the ropes thy temples chafe and bite.²
 O thou enravisht by my cheek and beauties of my form, * Why so translate thyself to youth and think I deem it right?
 Dyeing disgracefully that white of reverend aged hairs, * And hiding for foul purposes their venerable white!
 Thou goest with one beard and comest back with quite another, * Like Punch-and-Judy man who works the Chinese shades by night.³

And how well saith another:—

Quoth she, "I see thee dye thy hoariness": * "To hide, O ears and eyes! from thee," quoth I:
 She roared with laugh and said, "Right funny this, * Thou art so lying e'en thy hair's a lie!"

Now when the broker heard her verse he exclaimed, "By Allah, thou hast spoken sooth!" The merchant asked what she said: so the broker repeated the verses to him; and he knew that she was in the right while he was wrong and desisted from buying her. Then another came forward and said, "Ask her if she will be mine at the same price"; but, when he did so, she looked at 1 As has been seen, slapping on the neck is equivalent to our "boxing ears," but much less barbarous and likely to injure the child. The most insulting blow is that with shoe, sandal, or slipper, because it brings foot in contact with head. Of this also I have spoken before.

2 Arab. "Ilibál" (=ropes) alluding to the A'akál-fillet which binds the Kúfiyah-kerchief on the Badawí's head (Pilgrimage, i. 346).

3 Arab. "Khíyál"; afterwards called Kara Gyuz (= "black eyes," from the celebrated Turkish Wazir). The mise-en-scène was like that of Punch, but of transparent cloth, lamp-lit inside, and showing silhouettes worked by hand. Nothing could be more Fescennine than Kara Gyuz, who appeared with a phallus longer than himself and made all the Consuls-General periodically complain of its abuse; while the dialogue, mostly in Turkish, was even more atrocious. These shows, now obsolete, used to enliven the Azbakiyah Gardens every evening, and explain Ovid's words, Delicias videam, Nile jocose, tuas!

4 Mohammed (Mishkát al-Masábih, ii. 360-62) says, "Change the whiteness of your hair but not with anything black." Abu Bakr, who was two years and some months older than the Prophet, used tincture of Henna and Katam. Old Turkish officers justify black dyes because these make them look younger and fiercer. Henna stains white hair orange red; and the Persians apply after it a paste of indigo leaves; the result is successively leek-green, emerald-green, bottle-green, and lastly lamp-black.

him and seeing that he had but one eye said, "This man is one-eyed; and it is of such as he that the poet saith¹:—

Consort not with the Cyclops e'en a day; • Beware his falsehood and his mischief fly:

Had this monocular a jot of good, • Allah had ne'er brought blindness to his eye!"

Then said the broker, pointing to another bidder, "Wilt thou be sold to this man?" She looked at him and seeing that he was short of stature and had a beard that reached to his navel, cried, "This is he of whom the poet speaketh:—

I have a friend who hath a beard • Allah to useless length unroll'd,
'Tis like a certain² winter night, • Longsome and darksome, drear and cold."

Said the broker, "O my lady, look who pleaseth thee of these that are present, and point him out, that I may sell thee to him." So she looked round the ring of merchants, examining one by one their physiognomies, till her glance fell on Ali Shar,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Eleventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the girl's glance fell on Ali Shar, she cast at him a look with longing eyes, which cost her a thousand sighs, and her heart was taken with him; for that he was of favour passing fair and pleasanter than zephyr or northern air: and she said, "O broker, I will be sold to none but to this my lord, owner of the handsome face and slender form, whom the poet thus describeth:—

Displaying that fair face³ • The tempted they assailed;
Who, had they wished me safe, • That lovely face had veiled!

For none shall own me but he, because his cheek is smooth and the water of his mouth sweet as Salsabil³; his spittle is a cure for the sick, and his charms daze and dazzle poet and proser, even as saith one of him:—

1 This prejudice extends all over the East: the Sanskrit saying is "Kvachit káná bhaveta sádhus"—now and then a monocular is honest. The left eye is the worst, and the popular idea is, I have said, that the damage will come by the injured member.

2 Arab "Ba'azu layáli," some night when his mistress failed him.

3 The fountain in Paradise before noticed.

His honey-dew of lips is wine ; his breath * Musk, and those teeth, smile shown, are camphor's hue :

Rizwán¹ hath turned him out o' doors, for fear * The Houris lapse from virtue at the view ;

Men blame his bearing for its pride, but when * In pride the full moon sails, excuse is due.

Lord of the curling locks and rose-red cheeks and ravishing look, of whom saith the poet :—

The fawn-like one a meeting promised me, * And eye expectant waxed and heart upstirred :

His eyelids bade me hold his word as true ; * But, in their languish,² can he keep his word ?

And as saith another :—

Quoth they, " Black letters on his cheek are writ ! * How canst thou love him and a side-beard see ? "

Quoth I, " Cease blame and cut your eliding short ; * If those be letters 'tis a forgery " :

Gather his charms all growths of Eden-garth * Whereto those Kausar³-lips bear testimony.

When the broker heard the verses she repeated on the charms of Ali Shar, he marvelled at her eloquence, no less than at the brightness of her beauty ; but her owner said to him, " Marvel not at her splendour which shameth the noonday sun, nor that her memory is stored with the choicest verses of the poets ; for, besides this, she can repeat the glorious Koran, according to the seven readings,⁴ and the august Traditions, after ascription and authentic transmission ; and she writeth the seven modes of handwriting⁵ and she knoweth more learning and knowledge than the most learned. Moreover, her hands are better than gold and silver ; for she maketh silken curtains and selleth them for fifty gold pieces each ; and it taketh her but eight days to make a curtain." Exclaimed the broker, " O happy the man who hath her in his house and maketh her of his choicest treasures ! "

¹ Before noticed as the Moslem St. Peter (as far as the keys go).

² Arab. " Munkasır " = broken, frail, languishing—the only form of the maladive allowed. Here again we have masculine for feminine: the eyelids show love-desire, but, etc.

³ The river of Paradise.

⁴ See vol. i. night xii., " The Second Kalandar's Tale."

⁵ Lane (ii. 472) refers for specimens of calligraphy to Herbin's "Développements," etc. There are many more than seven styles of writing, as I have shown in vol. i. night xiii.

and her owner said to him, "Sell her to whom she will." So the broker went up to Ali Shar and kissing his hands, said to him, "O my lord, buy thou this damsel, for she hath made choice of thee.¹" Then he set forth to him all her charms and accomplishments, and added, "I give thee joy if thou buy her, for this be a gift from Him who is no niggard of His giving." Whereupon Ali bowed his head groundwards awhile, laughing at himself and secretly saying, "Up to this hour I have not broken my fast; yet I am ashamed before the merchants to own that I have no money wherewith to buy her." The damsel, seeing him hang down his head, said to the broker, "Take my hand and lead me to him, that I may show my beauty to him and tempt him to buy me; for I will not be sold to any but to him." So the broker took her hand and stationed her before Ali Shar, saying, "What is thy good pleasure, O my lord?" But he made him no answer; and the girl said to him, "O my lord and darling of my heart, what aileth thee that thou wilt not bid for me? Buy me for what thou wilt and I will bring thee good fortune." So he raised his eyes to her and said, "Is buying perforce? Thou art dear at a thousand dinars." Said she, "Then buy me, O my lord, for nine hundred." He cried, "No," and she rejoined, "Then for eight hundred"; and though he again said, "Nay," she ceased not to abate the price, till she came to an hundred dinars. Quoth he, "I have not by me a full hundred." So she laughed and asked, "How much dost thou lack of an hundred?" He answered, "By Allah, I have neither an hundred dinars, nor any other sum; for I own neither white coin nor red cash, neither dinar nor dirham. So look out thou for another and a better customer." And when she knew that he had nothing, she said to him, "Take me by the hand and carry me aside into a by-lane, as if thou wouldst examine me privily." He did so and she drew from her bosom a purse containing a thousand dinars, which she gave him, saying, "Pay down nine hundred to my price and let the hundred remain with thee by way of provision." He did as she bade him, and buying her for nine hundred dinars paid down the price from her own purse and carried her to his house. When she entered it, she found a dreary desolate saloon without carpets or vessels; so she gave him other thousand dinars, saying, "Go to the bazar and buy three hundred dinars' worth of furniture and vessels for the house, and three dinars' worth of meat and drink;"——And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Amongst good Moslems this would be a claim upon a man.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twelfth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the slave-girl, "Bring us meat and drink for three dinars; furthermore a piece of silk, the size of a curtain, and bring golden and silvern thread and sewing-silk of seven colours." Thus he did, and she furnished the house and they sat down to eat and drink; after which they went to bed and took their pleasure one of the other. And they lay the night embraced behind the curtain and were even as saith the poet¹ :—

Cleave fast to her thou lovest and let the envious rail amain; For calumny and envy ne'er to favour love were fain.

Lo, whilst I slept, in dreams I saw thee lying by my side And, from thy lips the sweetest, sure, of limpid springs did drain.

Yea, true and certain all I saw is, as I will avouch, And 'spite the envier, thereto I surely will attain.

There is no goodlier sight, indeed, for eyes to look upon, Than when one couch in its embrace enfoldeth lovers twain.

Each to the other's bosom clasped, clad in their twinned delight, Whilst hand with hand and arm with arm about their necks enchain,

Lo, when two hearts are straitly knit in passion and desire, But on cold iron smite the folk who chide at them in vain.

Thou, that for loving censurest the votaries of love, Canst thou assain a heart diseased or heal a cankered brain?

If in thy time thou find but one to love thee and be true, I rede thee cast the world away and with that one remain.

So they lay together till the morning, and love for the other waxed firmly fixed in the heart of each. And on rising, Zumurrud took the curtain and embroidered it with coloured silks and purfled it with silver and gold thread, and she added thereto a border depicting round about it all manner birds and beasts; nor is there in the world a feral but she wrought his semblance. This she worked in eight days, till she had made an end of it, when she trimmed it and glazed and ironed it and gave it to her lord, saying, "Carry it to the bazar and sell it to one of the merchants at fifty dinars; but beware lest thou sell it to a passer-by, as this would cause a separation between me and thee, for we have foes who are not unthoughtful of us." "I hear and I obey," answered he, and repairing to the bazar sold the curtain to a merchant, as she bade him; after which he bought a piece of silk for another curtain, and gold and silver and silken thread as before, and what they needed of food, and brought all this to her, giving her the rest of the money. Now every eight days she made a curtain, which he sold for fifty dinars, and on this wise passed a whole year. At the end of that time he went as usual to the bazar with a curtain, which he gave to the broker; and there came up to him a Nazarene who bid him sixty dinars for it; but he refused, and the Christian continued bidding higher and higher, till he came to an hundred dinars and bribed the broker with ten ducats. So the man returned to Ali Shar and told him of the proffered price and urged him to accept the offer and sell the article at the Nazarene's valuation, saying, "O my lord, be not afraid of this Christian for that he can do thee no hurt." The merchants also were urgent with him; so he sold the curtain to the Christian, albeit his heart misgave him; and, taking the money, set off to return home. Presently, as he walked, he found the Christian walking behind him; so he said to him, "O Nazarene,¹ why dost thou follow in my footsteps?" Answered the other, "O my lord, I want a something at the end of the street, Allah never bring thee to want!" but Ali Shar had barely reached his place before the Christian overtook him; so he said to him, "O accursed, what aileth thee to follow me wherever I go?" Replied the other, "O my lord, give me a draught of water, for I am athirst; and with Allah be thy reward²!" Quoth Ali Shar to himself, "Verily, this man is an Infidel who payeth tribute and claimeth our protection,³ and he asketh me for a draught of water; by Allah I will not baulk him!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ These lines have occurred twice already: and first appear in vol. i. night xxii. I have borrowed from Mr. Payne (vi 46).

1 Arab, "Ya Nasráni"; the address is not intrinsically slighting, but it may easily be made so. I have elsewhere noted that when Julian (is said to have) exclaimed, "Vicisti Nazarene!" he was probably thinking in Eastern phrase "Nasarta, yá Nasráni!"

2 Thirst is the strongest of all pleas to an Eastern, especially to a Persian, who never forgets the sufferings of his Imam, Husayn, at Kerbela. he would hardly withhold it from the murderer of his father. There is also a Hadis, "Thou shalt not refuse water to him who thirsteth in the desert."

3 Arab, "Zimmi," which Lane (ii. 474) aptly translates a "tributary." The Koran (chapt. ix.) orders Unbelievers to Islamize or to "pay tribute by right of subjection" (lit. 'an yadin= out of hand, an expression much debated). The least tribute is one dinar per annum which goes to the poor-rate; and for this the Kafir enjoys protection and almost all the civil rights of Moslems

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth Ali Shar to himself, "This man is a tributary Unbeliever and he asked me for a draught of water; by Allah, I will not baulk him!" So he entered the house and took a gugglet of water; but the slave-girl Zumurrud saw him and said to him, "O my love, hast thou sold the curtain?" He replied, "Yes"; and she asked, "To a merchant or to a passer-by? for my heart presageth a parting." And he answered, "To whom but to a merchant?" Thereupon she rejoined, "Tell me the truth of the case, that I may order my affair; and why take the gugglet of water?" And he, "To give the broker to drink," upon which she exclaimed, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" and she repeated these two couplets¹:—

O thou who seekest separation, act leisurely, and let not the embrace of the beloved deceive thee!

Act leisurely; for the nature of fortune is treacherous, and the end of every union is disjunction.

Then he took the gugglet and, going out, found the Christian within the vestibule and said to him, "How comest thou here and how darest thou, O dog, enter my house without my leave?" Answered he, "O my lord, there is no difference between the door and the vestibule, and I never intended to stir hence, save to go out; and my thanks are due to thee for thy kindness and favour, thy bounty and generosity." Then he took the mug, and emptying it returned it to Ali Shar, who received it and waited for him to rise up and to go; but he did not move. So Ali said to him, "Why dost thou not rise and wend thy way?" and he answered, "O my lord, be not of those who do a kindness and then make it a reproach, nor of those of whom saith the poet²:—

They're gone who when thou stoodest at their door * Would for thy wants so generously cater:

But stand at door of churls who followed them, * They'd make high favour of a draught of water!

And he continued, "O my lord, I have drunk, and now I would have thee give me to eat of whatever is in the house, though it be but a bit of bread or a biscuit with an onion." Replied Ali Shar, "Begone, without more chaffer and chatter; there is nothing in the house." He persisted, "O my lord if there be nothing in the house, take these hundred dinars and bring us something from the market, if but a single scone, that bread and salt may pass between us.¹" With this quoth Ali Shar to himself, "This Christian is surely mad; I will take his hundred dinars and bring him somewhat worth a couple of dirhams and laugh at him." And the Nazarene added, "O my lord, I want but a small matter to stay my hunger, were it but a dry scone and an onion; for the best food is that which doeth away appetite, not rich viands; and how well saith the poet:—

¹ This tetraстich has before occurred, so I quote Lane (ii. 444).

² In vol. i. night xxxv. the same occurs with a difference.

Hunger is sated with a bone-dry scone, • How is it then² in woes of want I wone?

Death is all-justest, lacking aught regard • For Caliph-king and beggar woe begone.

Then quoth Ali Shar, "Wait here, while I lock the saloon and fetch thee somewhat from the market"; and quoth the Christian, "To hear is to obey." So Ali Shar shut up the saloon, and locking the door with a padlock put the key in his pocket; after which he went to market and bought fried cheese and virgin honey and bananas³ and bread, with which he returned to the house. Now when the Christian saw the provision, he said, "O my lord, this is overmuch; 'tis enough for half a score of men and I am alone; but belike thou wilt eat with me." Replied Ali, "Eat by thyself, I am full"; and the Christian rejoined, "O my lord, the wise say, Whoso eateth not with his guest is a son of a whore." Now when Ali Shar heard these words from the Nazarene, he sat down and ate a little with him, after which he would have held his hand;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fourteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ali Shar sat down and ate a little with him, after which he would have held his hand; but the Nazarene privily took a banana and peeled it; then splitting it in twain put into one half concentrated Bhang, mixed with opium, a drachm whereof would overthrow an elephant; and he dipped it in the honey and gave it to Ali Shar, saying, "O my lord, by the truth of thy religion, I adjure thee to take this." So Ali Shar, being ashamed to make him forsworn, took it and swallowed it; but hardly had it settled well in his stomach, when his head forwent both his feet and he was as though he had been a year asleep. As soon as the Nazarene saw this, he rose to his feet as he had been a scald wolf or a cat-o'-mount¹ at bay and, taking the saloon key, left Ali Shar prostrate and ran off to rejoin his brother. And the cause of his so doing was that the Nazarene's brother was the same decrepit old man who purposed to buy Zumurrud for a thousand dinars, but she would none of him and jeered him in verse. He was an Unbeliever inwardly, though a Moslem outwardly, and had called himself Rashid al-Din²; and when Zumurrud mocked him and would not accept of him, he complained to his brother, the aforesaid Christian, who played this sleight to take her from her master Ali Shar; whereupon his brother, Barsúm by name, said to him, "Fret not thyself about the business; for I will make shift to seize her for thee, without expending either dinar or dirham." Now he was a skilful wizard, crafty and wicked; so he watched his time and ceased not his practices till he played Ali Shar the trick before related; then, taking the key, he went to his brother and acquainted him with what had passed. Thereupon Rashid al-Din mounted his she-mule and repaired with his brother and his servants to the house of Ali Shar, taking with him a purse of a thousand dinars, wherewith to bribe the Chief of Police should he meet him. He opened the saloon-door, and the men who were with him rushed in upon Zumurrud and forcibly seized her, threatening her with death if she spoke; but they left the place as it was and took nothing therefrom. Lastly, they left Ali Shar lying in the vestibule after they had shut the door on him and laid the saloon key by his side. Then the Christian carried the girl to his own house and setting her amongst his handmaids and concubines, said to her, "O strumpet, I am the old man whom thou didst reject and lampoon; but now I have thee, without paying dinar or dirham." Replied she (and her eyes streamed with tears), "Allah requite thee, O wicked old man, for sundering me and my lord!" He rejoined, "Wanton minx and whore that thou art, thou shalt see how I will punish thee! By the truth of the Messiah and the Virgin, except thou obey me and embrace my faith, I will torture thee with all manner of torture!" She replied, "By Allah, though thou cut my flesh to bits I will not forswear the faith of Al-Islam! It may be Almighty Allah will bring me speedy relief, for He doth even as He is lief, and the wise say:—Better body to scathe than a flaw in faith." Thereupon the old man called his eunuchs and women, saying, "Throw her down!" So they threw her down and he ceased not to beat her with grievous beating, whilst she cried for help and no help came; then she no longer implored aid but fell to saying, "Allah is my sufficiency, and He is indeed all-sufficient!" till her groans ceased and her breath failed her and she fell into a fainting-fit. Now when his heart was soothed by bashing her, he said to the eunuchs, "Drag her forth by the feet and cast her down in the kitchen, and give her nothing to eat." And after quietly sleeping that night, on the morrow the accursed old man sent for her and beat her again, after which he bade the Castrato return her to her place. When the burning of the blows had cooled, she said, "There is no god but the God, and Mohammed is the Apostle of God! Allah is my sufficiency and excellent is my Guardian!" And she called for succour upon our Lord Mohammed (whom Allah bless and keep!). —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The old rite, I repeat, has lost amongst all but the noblest of Arab tribes the whole of its significance; and the traveller must be careful how he trusts to the phrase, "Nahnu mālihin"—we are bound together by the salt.

² Arab. "Alāma" = Alā-mā = upon what? wherefore?

³ Arab. "Mauz"; hence the Linnean name Musa (paradisiaca, etc.). The word is explained by Sale (Koran, chap. xxxvii. 146) as "a small tree or shrub"; and he would identify it with Jonah's gourd.

¹ Lane (ii. 446) "bald wolf or empowered fate," reading (with Mac.) Kazá for Kattan (cat).

² i.e., "The Orthodox in the Faith." Ráshid is a proper name; witness that scourge of Syria, Ráshid Pasha. Born in 1830, of the Haji Nazir Agha family, Darrah-Bey of Macedonian Drina, he was educated in Paris, where he learned the usual hatred of Europeans; he entered the Egyptian service in 1851; and, presently exchanging it for the Turkish, became in due time Wali (Governor-General) of Syria, which he plundered most shamelessly. Recalled in 1872, he eventually entered the Ministry, and on June 15, 1876, he was shot down, with other villains like himself, by gallant Captain Hasan, the Circassian (Yahham-hu 'Iláh!').

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Zumurrud called for succour upon our Lord Mohammed (whom Allah bless and keep!). Such was her case; but as regards Ali Shar, he ceased not sleeping till next day, when the Bhang quitted his brain and he opened his eyes and cried out, "O Zumurrud"; but no one answered him. So he entered the saloon and found the empty air and the fane afar¹; whereby he knew that it was the Nazarene who had played him this trick. And he groaned and wept and lamented and again shed tears, repeating these couplets:—

¹ Quoted from a piece of verse, of which more presently.

O love, thou'rt instant in thy cruellest guise; * Here is my heart 'twixt fears and miseries:

Pity, O lords, a thrall who, felled on way * Of Love, erst wealthy, now a beggar lies:

What profits archer's art if, when the foe * Draw near, his bowstring snap ere arrow flies:

And when griefs multiply on generous man * And urge, what fort can fend from destinies?

How much and much I warded parting, but * "When Destiny descends she blinds our eyes?"

And when he had ended his verse he sobbed with loud sobs and repeated also these couplets:—

Enrobes with honour sands of camp her foot-step wandering lone; *

Pines the poor mourner as she wins the stead where wont to wone:

She turns to resting-place of tribe, and yearns thereon to view * The spring-camp lying desolate with ruins overstrown:

She stands and questions of the site, but with the tongue of ease * The mount replies, "There is no path that leads to union, none!

'Tis as the lightning flash erewhile bright glittered o'er the camp * And died in darkling air no more to be for ever shown."

And he repented when repentance availed him naught, and wept and rent his raiment. Then he hent in hand two stones and went round about the city, beating his breast with the stones and crying, "O Zunnurud!" whilst the small boys flocked round him, calling out, "A madman! A madman!" and all who knew him wept for him, saying, "This is Such an one; what evil hath befallen him?" Thus he continued doing all that day and, when night darkened on him, he lay down in one of the city-lanes and slept till morning. On the morrow he went round about town with the stones till eventide, when he returned to his saloon to pass therein the night. Presently one of his neighbours saw him, and this worthy old woman said to him, "O my son, Heaven give thee healing! How long hast thou been mad?" And he answered her with these two couplets¹:—

They said, Thou ravest upon the person thou lovest. And I replied,
The sweets of life are only for the mad.

¹ This tetrastich has occurred before (vol. iii. night cxciii.) I quote Lane (ii. 449), who quotes Dryden's Spanish Friar:—

There is a pleasure sure in being mad
Which none but madmen know.

Drop the subject of my madness, and bring her upon whom I rave. If she cure my madness do not blame me.

So his old neighbour knew him for a lover who had lost his beloved and said, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! O my son, I wish thou wouldst acquaint me with the tale of thine affliction. Peradventure Allah may enable me to help thee against it, if it so please Him." So he told her all that had befallen him with Barsum the Nazarene and his brother the wizard who had named himself Rashid al-Din and when she understood the whole case, she said, "O my son, indeed thou hast excuse." And her eyes railed tears and she repeated these two couplets:—

Enough for lovers in this world their ban and bane; * By Allah, lover ne'er in fire of Sakar fries:
For, sure they died of love-desire to none they told * Chastely, and to this truth tradition testifies.¹

And after she had finished her verse she said, "O my son, rise at once and buy me a crate, such as the jewel-pedlars carry; buy also bangles and seal-rings and bracelets and ear-rings and other gew-gaws wherein women delight and grudge not the cash. Put all the stock into the crate and bring it to me, and I will set it on my head and go round about in the guise of a huckstress, and make search for her in all the houses, till I happen on news of her—Inshallah!" So Ali Shar rejoiced in her words and kissed her hands, then going out, speedily brought her all she required; whereupon she rose and donned a patched gown and threw over her head a honey-yellow veil, and took staff in hand, and with the basket on her head began wandering about the passages and the houses. She ceased not to go from house to house and street to street and quarter to quarter, till Allah Almighty led her to the house of the accused Rashid al-Din the Nazarene where, hearing groans within, she knocked at the door,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the old woman heard groans within the house, she knocked at the door, whereupon a slave-girl came down and opening to her, saluted her. Quoth the old woman, "I have these trifles for sale; is there any one with you who will buy aught of them?" "Yes," answered the damsel and, carrying her indoors, made her sit down; whereupon all the slave-girls came round her and each bought something of her. And as the old woman spoke them fair and was easy with them as to price, all rejoiced in her because of her kind ways and pleasant speech. Meanwhile she looked narrowly at the ins and outs of the place to see who it was she had heard groaning, till her glance fell on Zumurrud, when she knew her, and she began to show her customers yet more kindness. At last she made sure that Zumurrud was laid prostrate; so she wept and said to the girls, "O my children, how cometh yonder young lady in this plight?" Then the slave-girls told her all what had passed, adding, "Indeed this matter is not of our choice; but our master commanded us to do thus, and he is now on a journey?" She said, "O my children, I have a favour to ask of you, and it is that you loose this unhappy damsel of her bonds, till you know of your lord's return, when do ye bind her again as she was; and you shall earn a reward from the Lord of all creatures." "We hear and obey," answered they, and at once loosing Zumurrud gave her to eat and drink. Thereupon quoth the old woman, "Would my leg had been broken ere I entered your house!" And she went up to Zumurrud and said to her, "O my daughter, Heaven keep thee safe; soon shall Allah bring thee relief." Then she privily told her that she came from her lord Ali Shar, and agreed with her to be on the watch for sounds that night, saying, "Thy lord will come and stand by the pavilion-bench and whistle¹ to thee; and when thou hearest him, do thou whistle back to him and let thyself down to him by a rope from the window, and he will take thee and go away with thee." So Zumurrud thanked the old woman, who went forth and returned to Ali Shar and told him what she had done, saying, "Go this night, at midnight, to such a quarter, for the accursed carle's house is there and its fashion is thus and thus. Stand under the window of the upper chamber and whistle; whereupon she will let herself down to thee; then do thou take her and carry her whither thou wilt." He thanked her for her good offices and with flowing tears repeated these couplets:—

¹ Lane (ii. 449) gives a tradition of the Prophet, "Whoso is in love, and acteth chastely, and concealeth (his passion) and dieth, dieth a martyr." Sakar is No. 5 Hell for Magi, Guebres, Parsis, etc.; it is used in the comic Persian curse, "Fi'n-nâri wa Sakar al-jadd w'al-pidar—In Hell and Sakar his grandfather and his father."

¹ Arab. "Sifr": I have warned readers that whistling is considered a kind of devilish speech by the Arabs, especially the Badawin; and that the traveller must avoid it. It savours of idolatry: in the Koran we find (chapt. viii. 35), "Their prayer at the House of God (Ka'abah) is none other than whistling and hand-clapping"; and tradition says that they whistled through their fingers. Besides many of the Jinn have only round holes by way of mouths and their speech is whistling—a kind of bird-language like sibilant English.

Now with their says and saids¹ no more vex me the chiding race; * My heart is weary and I'm worn to bone by their disgrace:
And tears a truthful legend² with a long ascription-chain * Of my desertion and distress the lineage can trace.
O thou heart-whole and free from dole and dolours I endure, * Cut short thy long persistency nor question of my case:
A sweet-lipped one and soft of sides and cast in shapeliest mould * Hath stormed my heart with honied lure and honied words of grace.
No rest my heart hath known since thou art gone, nor ever close * These eyes, nor patience-aloe 'scape the hopes I dare to trace:
Ye have abandoned me to be the pawn of vain desire, * In squalid state 'twixt enviers and they who blame to face:
As for forgetting you or love 'tis thing I never knew; * Nor in my thought shall ever pass a living thing but you.

And when he ended his verses he sighed and shed tears and repeated also these couplets:—

Divinely were inspired his words who brought me news of you; * For brought he unto me a gift was music in mine ear:
Take he for gift, if him content, this worn-out threadbare robe, * My heart, which was in pieces torn when parting from my fere.

He waited till night darkened and, when came the appointed time, he went to the quarter she had described to him, and saw and recognised the Christian's house; so he sat down on the bench under the gallery. Presently drowsiness overcame him and he slept (Glory be to Him who sleepeth not!), for it was long since he had tasted sleep, by reason of the violence of his passion, and he became as one drunken with slumber. And while he was on this wise—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Seventeenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that while he lay asleep, behold, a certain thief, who had come out that night and prowled about the skirts of the city to steal somewhat, happened by the decree of Destiny on the Nazarene's house. He went round about it, but found no way of climbing up into it, and

1 Arab. "Kil wa kál"=lit. "it was said that he said"; a popular phrase for chit-chat, tittle-tattle, prattle and prate, etc

2 Arab. "Hadis," comparing it with a tradition of the Prophet.

presently on his circuit he came to the bench, where he saw Ali Shar asleep and stole his turband; and as he was taking it suddenly Zurmurrud looked out, and, seeing the thief standing in the darkness, took him for her lord; whereupon she let herself down to him by the rope with a pair of saddle-bags full of gold. Now when the robber saw that he said to himself, "This is a wondrous thing, and there must needs be some marvellous cause to it." Then he snatched up the saddle-bags, and threw Zurmurrud over his shoulders and made off with both like the blinding lightning. Quoth she, "Verily, the old woman told me that thou wast weak with illness on my account; and here thou art, stronger than a horse." He made her no reply; so she put her hand to his face and felt a beard like the broom of palm-frond used for the Hanımam,¹ as if he were a hog which had swallowed feathers and they had come out of his gullet; whereat she took fright and said to him, "What art thou?" "O strumpet," answered he, "I am the sharper Jawán² the Kurd, of the band of Ahmad al-Danaf; we are forty sharpeners." When she heard his words she wept and beat her face, knowing that Fate had gotten the better of her and that she had no resource but resignation and to put her trust in Allah Almighty. So she took patience and submitted herself to the ordinance of the Lord, saying, "There is no god but the God! As often as we escape from one woe we fall into a worse." Now the cause of Jawan's coming thither was this: he had said to Calamity Ahmad, "O Sharper-captain,³ I have been in this city before and know a cavern without the walls which will hold forty souls; so I will go before you thither and set my mother therein. Then will I return to the city and steal somewhat for the luck of all of you and keep it till you come; so shall you be my guests and I will show you hospitality this day." Replied Ahmad al-Danaf, "Do what thou wilt." So Jawan went forth to the place before them and set his mother in the cave; but as he came out he found a trooper lying asleep, with his horse picketed beside him; so he cut his throat, and taking his clothes and his charger and his arms hid them with his mother in the cave, where also he tethered the horse. Then he betook himself to the city and prowled about, till he happened on the Christian's house

1 Arab. "Mikashshah" the thick part of a midrib of a palm-frond soaked for some days in water and beaten out till the fibres separate. It makes an exceedingly hard although not a lasting broom.

2 Persian, "the youth, the brave"; Sansk Yuván; and Lat. Juvenis. The Kurd, in tales, is generally a sturdy thief; and in real life is little better.

3 Arab. "Yá Shátir"; lit. O clever one (in a bad sense) and did with Ali Shar's turband and Zumurrud and her saddle-bags as we have said. He ceased not to run, with Zumurrud on his back, till he came to the cavern, where he gave her in charge of his mother, saying, "Keep thou watch over her till I return to thee at first dawn of day," and went his ways.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Eighteenth Night.

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth Kurdish Jawan to his mother, "Keep thou watch over her till I come back to thee at first dawn of day," and went his ways. Now Zumurrud said to herself, "Why am I so heedless about saving my life and wherefore await till these forty men come?" Then she turned to the old woman, Jawan's mother, and said to her, "O my aunt, wilt thou not rise up and come without the cave, that I may louse thee in the sun?" Replied the old woman, "Ay, by Allah, O my daughter: this long time have I been out of reach of the bath; for these hogs cease not to carry me from place to place." So they went without the cavern, and Zumurrud combed out her head-hair and killed the lice on her locks, till the tickling soothed her and she fell asleep; whereupon Zumurrud arose and donning the clothes of the murdered trooper, girt her waist with his sword and covered her head with his turband, so that she became as she were a man. Then mounting the horse, after she had taken the saddle-bags full of gold, she breathed a prayer, "O good Protector, protect me, I adjure thee, by the glory of Mohammed (whom Allah bless and preserve!)" adding these words in thought, "If I return to the city belike one of the trooper's folk will see me, and no good will befall me." So she turned her back on the town and rode forth into the wild and the waste. And she ceased not faring forth with her saddle-bags and the steed, eating of the growth of the earth and drinking of its waters, she and her horse, for ten days, and on the eleventh, she came in sight of a city pleasant and secure from dread, and stablished in happy stead. Winter had gone from it with his cold showers, and Prime had come to it with his roses and orange-blossoms and varied flowers; and its blooms i Lane (ii. 453) has it, "that I may dress thy hair," etc. This is Bowdlerising with a witness. [The story-teller forgets that the time is the middle of the night.—L. C. S.]

were brightly blowing; its streams were merrily flowing, and its birds warbled coming and going. And she drew near the dwellings and would have entered the gate when she saw the troops and Emirs and Grandees of the place drawn up, whereat she marvelled seeing them in such unusual case, and said to herself, "The people of the city are all gathered at its gate: needs must there be a reason for this." Then she made towards them; but, as she drew near, the soldiery dashed forward to meet her and, dismounting all, kissed ground between her hands and said, "Aid thee Allah, O our lord the Sultan!" Then the notables and dignitaries ranged themselves before her in double line, whilst the troops ordered the people in, saying, "Allah aid thee and make thy coming a blessing to the Moslems, O Sultan of all creatures! Allah establish thee, O King of the time and union-pearl of the day and the tide!" Asked Zumurrud, "What aileth you, O people of this city?" And the Head Chamberlain answered, "Verily, He hath given to thee who is no niggard in His giving; and He hath been bountiful to thee and hath made thee Sultan of this city and ruler over the necks of all who are therein; for know thou it is the custom of the citizens, when their King deceaseth leaving no son, that the troops should sally forth to the suburbs and sojourn there three days: and whoever cometh from the quarter whence thou hast come, him they make King over them. So praised be Allah who hath sent us of the sons of the Turks a well-favoured man; for had a lesser than thou presented himself, he had been Sultan." Now Zumurrud was clever and well-advised in all she did: so she said, "Think not that I am of the common folk of the Turks! nay, I am of the sons of the great, a man of condition; but I was wroth with my family, so I went forth and left them. See these saddle-bags full of gold which I have brought under me that, by the way, I might give alms thereof to the poor and the needy." So they called down blessings upon her and rejoiced in her with exceeding joy, and she also joyed in them and said in herself, "Now that I have attained to this" —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Nineteenth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth Zumurrud to herself, "Now that I have attained to this case, haply Allah will reunite me with my lord in this place, for He can do whatso He willeth." Then the troops escorted her to the city and, all dismounting, walked before her to the palace. Here she alighted, and the Emirs and Grandees taking her under both armpits¹ carried her into the palace and seated her on the throne; after which they all kissed ground before her. And when duly enthroned she bade them open the treasuries and gave largesse to all the troops, who offered up prayers for the continuance of her reign, and all the townsfolk accepted her rule and all the lieges of the realm. Thus she abode awhile bidding and forbidding, and all the people came to hold her in exceeding reverence and heartily to love her, by reason of her continence and generosity; for taxes she remitted and prisoners she released and grievances she redressed; but as often as she bethought her of her lord she wept and besought Allah to reunite her and him; and one night, as she chanced to be thinking of him and calling to mind the days she had passed with him, her eyes ran over with tears and she versified in these two couplets:—

My yearning for thee though long is fresh, * And the tears which chafe these eyelids increase:

When I weep, I weep from the burn of love, * For to lover severance is decease.²

And when she had ended her verse she wiped away her tears, and repairing to the palace betook herself to the Harim, where she appointed to the slave-girls and concubines separate lodgings and assigned them pensions and allowances, giving out that she was minded to live apart and devote herself to works of piety. So she applied herself to fasting and praying, till the Emirs said, "Verily, this Sultan is eminently devout"; nor would she suffer any male attendants about her, save two little eunuchs to serve her. And on this wise she held the throne a whole year, during which time she heard no news of her lord, and failed to hit upon his traces, which was exceeding grievous to her; so when her distress became excessive she summoned her Wazirs and Chamberlains and bid them fetch architects and builders and make her in front of the palace a horse-course, one parasang long and the like broad. They hastened to do her bidding, and lay out the place to her liking; and when it was completed she went down into it and they pitched for her there a great pavilion, wherein the chairs of the Emirs were ranged in due order. Moreover, she bade them bespread the racing-plain with tables bearing all manners rich meats, and when this was done she ordered the Grandees to eat. So they ate and she said to them, "It is my will that, on seeing the new moon of each month, ye do on this wise and proclaim in the city that no man shall open his shop, but that all our lieges shall come and eat of the King's banquet, and that whoso disobeyeth shall be hanged over his own door.¹" So they did as she bade them, and ceased not so to do till the first new moon of the second year appeared; when Zumurrud went down into the horse-course and the crier proclaimed aloud, saying, "Ho, ye lieges and people one and all, whoso openeth store or shop or house shall straightway be hanged over his own door; for it behoveth you to come in a body and eat of the King's banquet." And when the proclamation became known, they laid the tables and the subjects came in hosts; so she bade them sit down at the trays and eat their fill of all the dishes. Accordingly they sat down and she took place on her chair of state, watching them, whilst each who was at meat said to himself, "Verily the King looketh at none save me." Then they fell to eating and the Emirs said to them, "Eat and be not ashamed; for this pleaseth the King." So they ate their fill and went away, blessing the sovereign and saying, one to the other, "Never in our days saw we a Sultan who loved the poor as doth this Sultan." And they wished him length of life. Upon this Zumurrud returned to her palace,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The sign of respect when a personage dismounts (Pilgrimage, 1. 77).

² So the Hindus speak of "the defilement of separation" as if it were an impurity.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twentieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Queen Zumurrud returned to her palace, rejoicing in her device and saying to herself, "Inshallah, I shall surely by this means happen on news of my lord Ali Shar." When the first day of the second month came round, she did as before, and when they had spread the tables she came down from her palace and took place on her throne and commanded the lieges to sit down and fall to. Now as she sat on her throne, at the head of the tables, watching the people take their places company by company and one by one, behold her eye fell on Barsum, the Nazarene, who had bought the ¹ Lane (i 605) gives a long and instructive note on these public royal banquets which were expected for the lieges by Moslem subjects. The hanging penalty is, perhaps, a little exaggerated, but we find the same excess in the priestly Gesta Romanorum.

No. 25.

Ali Shar and Zumurrud.

“They sat down and she took place on her chair of state, watching them. . . . Then they fell to eating.”

curtain of her lord; and she knew him and said in her mind, "This is the first of my joy and the winning of my wish." Then Barsum came up to the table and sitting down with the rest to eat, espied a dish of sweet rice sprinkled with sugar; but it was far from him, so he pushed up to it through the crowd and putting out his hand to it, seized it, and set it before himself. His next neighbour said to him, "Why dost thou not eat of what is before thee? Is not this a disgrace to thee? How canst thou reach over for a dish which is far from thee? Art thou not ashamed?" Quoth Barsum, "I will eat of none save this same." Rejoined the other, "Eat then, and Allah give thee no good of it!" But another man, a Hashish-eater, said, "Let him eat of it, that I may eat with him." Replied his neighbour, "O unluckiest of Hashish-eaters, this is no meat for thee; it is eating for Emirs. Let it be, that it may return to those for whom it is meant and they eat it." But Barsum heeded him not and took a mouthful of the rice and put it in his mouth; and was about to take a second mouthful when the Queen, who was watching him, cried out to certain of her guards, saying, "Bring me yonder man with the dish of sweet rice before him and let him not eat the mouthful he hath ready but throw it from his hand.¹" So four of the guards went up to Barsum and haled him along on his face, after throwing the mouthful of rice from his hand, and set him standing before Zumurrud, whilst all the people left eating and said to one another, "By Allah, he did wrong in not eating of the food meant for the likes of him." Quoth one, "For me I was content with this porridge² which is before me." And the Hashish-eater said, "Praised be Allah who hindered me from eating of the dish of sugared rice, for I expected it to stand before him and was waiting only for him to have his enjoyment of it, to eat with him, when there befell him what we see." And the general said, one to other, "Wait till we behold what shall befall him." Now as they brought him before Queen Zumurrud she cried, "Woe to thee, O blue eyes! What is thy name and why comest thou to 1 Had he eaten it he would have become her guest. Amongst the older Badawin it was sufficient to spit upon a man (in entreaty) to claim his protection; so the horse-thieves when caught were placed in a hole in the ground covered over with matting to prevent this happening. Similarly Saladin (Salâh al-Din) the chivalrous would not order a cup of water for the robber, Reynald de Châtillon, before putting him to death.

2 Arab. "Kishk" properly "Kashk" = wheat-meal coarsely ground and eaten with milk or broth. It is de rigueur with the Egyptian Copts on the "Friday of Sorrow" (Good Friday): and Lane gives the recipe for making it (M. E. chapt. xxvi.).

our country?" But the accursed called himself out of his name, having a white turband¹ on, and answered, "O King, my name is Ali; I work as a weaver and I came hither to trade." Quoth Zumurrud, "Bring me a table of sand and a pen of brass," and when they brought her what she sought, she took the sand and the pen, and struck a geomantic figure in the likeness of a baboon; then, raising her head, she looked hard at Barsum for an hour or so and said to him, "O dog, how darest thou lie to Kings? Art thou not a Nazarene, Barsum by name, and comest thou not hither in quest of somewhat? Speak the truth or, by the glory of the Godhead, I will strike off thy head!" At this Barsum was confounded and the Emirs and bystanders said, "Verily, this King understandeth geomancy; blessed be He who hath gifted him!" Then she cried out upon the Christian and said, "Tell me the truth, or I will make an end of thee!" Barsum replied, "Pardon, O King of the age; thou art right as regards the table, for the far one² is indeed a Nazarene."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Barsum replied, "Pardon, O King of the age; thou art right as regards the table, for thy slave is indeed a Nazarene." Whereupon all present, gentle and simple, wondered at the King's skill in hitting upon the truth by geomancy, and said, "Verily this King is a diviner, whose like there is not in the world." Thereupon Queen Zumurrud bade slay the Nazarene and stuff his skin with straw and hang it over the gate of the race-course. Moreover, she commanded to dig a pit without the city and burn therein his flesh and bones, and throw over his ashes offal and ordure. "We hear and obey," answered they, and did with him all she bade; and, when the folk saw what had befallen the Christian, they said, "Serve him right; but what an unlucky monthful was that for him!" And another said, "Be the far one's wife divorced if this vow be broken: never again to the end of my days will I eat of sugared rice!" and the Hashish-eater cried, "Praised be Allah, who spared me this fellow's fate by saving me from eating of that same rice!" Then they all went out, holding it thenceforth unlawful to sit over against the dish of sweet rice as the Nazarene had sat. Now when the first day of the third month came, they laid the tables according to custom, and covered them with dishes and chargers, and Queen Zumurrud came down and sat on her throne, with her guards in attendance, as of wont, in awe of her dignity and majesty. Then the townsfolk entered as before and went round about the tables, looking for the place of the dish of sweet rice, and quoth one to another, "Hark ye, O Hájí¹ Khálaf!" and the other answered, "At thy service, O Hájí Khálid." Said Khálid, "Avoid the dish of sweet rice and look thou eat not thereof; for, if thou do, by early morning thou wilt be hanged."² Then they sat down to meat around the table; and, as they were eating, Queen Zumurrud chanced to look from her throne and saw a man come running in through the gate of the horse-course; and having considered him attentively, she knew him for Jawan the Kurdish thief who murdered the trooper. Now the cause of his coming was this: when he left his mother he went to his comrades and said to them, "I did good business yesterday, for I slew a trooper and took his horse. Moreover, there fell to me last night a pair of saddle-bags full of gold, and a young lady worth more than the money in pouch; and I have left all that with my mother in the cave." At this they rejoiced and repaired to the cavern at night-fall, whilst Jawan the Kurd walked in front and the rest behind; he wishing to bring them the booty of which he had boasted. But he found the place clean empty and questioned his mother, who told him all that had befallen her; whereupon he bit his hands for regret and exclaimed, "By Allah, I will assuredly make search for the harlot and take her, wherever she is, though it be in the shell of a pistachio-nut,³ and quench my malice on her!" So he went forth in quest of her, and ceased not journeying from place to place till he came to Queen Zumurrud's city. On entering he found the town deserted and enquiring of some women whom he saw looking from the windows, they told him that it was the Sultan's custom to make a banquet for the people on the first of each month and that all the lieges were bound to go and eat of it. Furthermore, the women directed him to the racing-ground, where the feast was spread. So he entered at a shuffling trot; and finding no place empty, save that before the dish of sweet rice

¹ In those days distinctive of Moslems.

² The euphemism has before been noticed: the Moslem reader would not like to pronounce the words "I am a Nazarene." The same formula occurs a little lower down to save the reciter or reader from saying "Be my wife divorced," etc.

¹ Arab. "Hájí," a favourite Egyptianism. We are wrong to write Hajji, which an Eastern would pronounce Háj-jí.

² This is Cairene "chafi."

³ Whose shell fits very tight.

already noticed, took his seat right opposite it and stretched out his hand towards the dish; whereupon the folk cried out to him, saying, "O our brother, what wouldst thou do?" Quoth he, "I would eat my fill of this dish." Rejoined one of the people, "If thou eat of it thou wilt assuredly find thyself hanged to-morrow morning." But Jawan said, "Hold thy tongue and talk not so unpleasantly." Then he stretched out his hand to the dish and drew it to him; but it so chanced that the Hashish-eater, of whom we have spoken, was sitting by him; and when he saw him take the dish, the fumes of the Hashish left his head and he fled from his place and sat down afar off, saying, "I will have nothing to do with yonder dish." Then Jawan the Kurd put out his hand (which was very like a raven's claws¹), scooped up therewith half the dishful and drew out his neave as it were a camel's hoof—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Jawan the Kurd drew his neave from the dish as it were a camel's hoof, and rolled the lump of rice in the palm of his hand till it was like a big orange, and threw it ravenously into his mouth; and it rolled down his gullet with a rumble like thunder, and the bottom of the deep dish appeared where said mouthful had been. Thereupon quoth to him one sitting by his side, "Praised be Allah for not making me meat between thy hands; for thou hast cleared the dish at a single mouthful"; and quoth the Hashish-eater, "Let him eat; methinks he hath a hanging face." Then, turning to Jawan he added, "Eat and Allah give thee small good of it." So Jawan put out his hand again and taking another mouthful was rolling it in his palm like the first, when behold, the Queen cried out to the guards saying, "Bring me yonder man in haste and let him not eat the mouthful in his hand." So they ran, and seizing him as he hung over the dish, brought him to her, and set him in her presence, whilst the people exulted over his mishap, and said one to the other, "Serve him right, for we warned him, but he would not take warning. Verily, this place is bound to be the death of whoso sitteth therein, and yonder rice bringeth doom to all who eat of it." Then said Queen Zumurrud to Jawan, "What is thy name and trade, and wherefore comest thou to our city?" Answered he, "O our lord the Sultan, my name is Othman; I work as a gardener, and am come hither in quest of somewhat I have lost." Quoth Zumurrud, "Here with a table of sand!" So they brought it, and she took the pen and drawing a geomantic scheme, considered it awhile, then raising her head, exclaimed, "Woe to thee, thou losel! How darest thou lie to Kings? This sand telleth me that of a truth thy name is Jawan the Kurd, and that thou art by trade a robber, taking men's goods in the way of unright and slaying those whom Allah hath forbidden to slay save for just cause." And she cried out upon him saying, "O hog, tell me the truth of thy case, or I will cut off thy head on the spot." Now when he heard these words he turned yellow, and his teeth chattered; then, deeming that he might save himself by truth-telling, he replied; "O King, thou sayest sooth; but I repent at thy hands henceforth and turn to Allah Almighty!" She answered, "It were not lawful for me to leave a pest in the way of Moslems"; and cried to her guards, "Take him and skin him and do with him as last month ye did by his like." They obeyed her commandment; and, when the Hashish-eater saw the soldiers seize the man, he turned his back upon the dish of rice, saying, "'Tis a sin to present my face to thee!" And after they had made an end of eating, they dispersed to their several homes and Zumurrud returned to her palace and dismissed her attendants. Now when the fourth month came round, they went to the race-course and made the banquet, according to custom, and the folk sat awaiting leave to begin. Presently Queen Zumurrud entered; and sitting upon her throne, looked at the tables and saw that room for four people was left void before the dish of rice, at which she wondered. Now as she was looking around, behold, she saw a man come trotting in at the gate of the horse-course; and he stayed not till he stood over the food-trays; and, finding no room save before the dish of rice, took his seat there. She looked at him and knowing him for the accursed Christian who called himself Rashid al-Din, said in her mind, "How blessed is this device of the food,¹ into whose toils this infidel hath fallen!" Now the cause of his coming was extraordinary, and it was on this wise. When he returned from his travel,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ His hand was like a raven's because he ate with thumb and two fingers, and it came up with the rice about it like a camel's hoof in dirty ground. This refers to the proverb (Buckhardt, 756), "He comes down a crow-claw (small) and comes up a camel-hoof (huge and round)."

¹ Easterns have a superstitious belief in the powers of food; I knew a learned man who never sat down to eat without a ceremonious salam to his meat.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the accursed, who had called himself Rashid al-Din, returned from travel, his household informed him that Zumurrud was missing and with her a pair of saddle-bags full of money; on hearing which ill tidings he rent his raiment and buffeted his face and plucked out his beard. Then he despatched his brother Barsum in quest of her to lands adjoining and when he was weary of awaiting news of him, he went forth himself to seek for him and for the girl, whereas fate led him to the city of Zumurrud. He entered it on the first day of the month, and finding the streets deserted and the shops shut, and women idling at the windows, he asked them the reason why, and they told him that the King made a banquet on the first of each month for the people, all of whom were bound to attend it, nor might any abide in his house or shop that day; and they directed him to the racing-plain. So he betook himself thither and found the people crowding about the food, and there was never a place for him save in front of the rice-dish now well-known. Here, then, he sat and put forth his hand to eat thereof, whereupon Zumurrud cried out to her guards, saying, "Bring me him who sitteth over against the dish of rice." So they knew him by what had before happened, and laid hands on him and brought him before Queen Zumurrud, who said to him, "Out on thee! What is thy name and trade, and what bringeth thee to our city?" Answered he, "O King of the age, my name is Rustam¹ and I have no occupation, for I am a poor darwaysh." Then said she to her attendants, "Bring me table of sand and pen of brass." So they brought her what she sought, as of wont; and she took the pen and made the dots which formed the figure and considered it awhile, then raising her head to Rashid al-Din, she said, "O dog, how dardest thou lie to Kings? Thy name is Rashid al-Din the Nazarene, thou art outwardly a Moslem, but a Christian at heart, and thine occupation is to lay snares for the slave-girls of the Moslems and make them captives. Speak the truth, or I will smite off thy head." He hesitated and stammered, then replied, "Thou sayest sooth, O King of the age!" Whereupon she commanded to throw him down and give him an hundred blows with a stick on each sole and a thousand stripes with a whip on his body; after which she bade flay him and stuff his skin with hards of flax and dig a pit without the city, wherein they should burn his corpse and cast on his ashes offal and ordure. They did as she bade them and she gave the people leave to eat. So they ate and when they had eaten their fill they went their ways, while Queen Zumurrud returned to her palace, saying, "I thank Allah for solacing my heart of those who wronged me." Then she praised the Creator of the earth and the heavens and repeated these couplets:—

¹ Lane (ii. 464) uses the vile Turkish corruption "Rustum," which, like its fellow "Rustem," would make a Persian shudder.

They ruled awhile, and theirs was harsh tyrannic rule, * But soon that rule went by as though it never were:

If just they had won justice; but they sinned, and so * The world collected all its bane for them to bear:

So died they and their case's tongue declares aloud * This is for that; so of the world your blaming spare.

And when her verse was ended she called to mind her lord Ali Shar and wept flowing tears; but presently recovered herself and said, "Haply Allah, who hath given mine enemies into my hand, will vouchsafe me the speedy return of my beloved"; and she begged forgiveness of Allah (be He extolled and exalted!), —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Queen begged forgiveness of Allah (be He extolled and exalted!) and said, "Haply He will vouchsafe me speedy reunion with my beloved Ali Shar, for He can do what He willeth and to His servants showeth grace, ever mindful of their case!" Then she praised Allah and again besought forgiveness of Him, submitting herself to the decrees of Destiny, assured that each beginning hath his end, and repeating the saying of the poet:—

Take all things easy; for all worldly things * In Allah's hand are ruled by Destiny:

Ne'er shall befall thee aught of things forbidden, * Nor what is bidden e'er shall fail to thee!

And what another saith:—

Roll up thy days¹ and easy shall they roll * Through life, nor haunt the house of grief and dole:

¹ Arab. "Darrij, i.e., let them slide (Americanicè).

Full many a thing, which is o'er hard to find, * Next hour shall bring thee to delight thy soul.

And what a third saith¹:—

Be mild what time thou 'rt ta'en with anger and despite * And patient, if there fall misfortune on thy head.
Indeed, the nights are quick and great with child by Time * And of all wondrous things are hourly brought to bed.

And what a fourth saith:—

Take patience which breeds good if patience thou can learn; * Be calm-souled, 'scaping anguish-draughts that gripe and ben; Know, that if patience with good grace thou dare refuse, * With ill-graced patience thou shalt bear what wrote the Pen.

After which she abode thus another whole month's space, judging the folk and bidding and forbidding by day, and by night weeping and bewailing her separation from her lord Ali Shar. On the first day of the fifth month, she bade them spread the banquet on the race-plain, according to custom, and sat down at the head of the tables, whilst the lieges awaited the signal to fall to, leaving the place before the dish of rice vacant. She sat with eyes fixed upon the gate of the horse-course, noting all who entered and saying in her soul, "O Thou who restoredest Joseph to Jacob and diddest away the sorrows of Job,^a vouchsafe of Thy might and Thy majesty to restore me my lord Ali Shar; for Thou over all things art Omnipotent, O Lord of the Worlds! O Guide of those who go astray! O Hearer of those that cry! O Answerer of those who pray, answer Thou my prayer, O Lord of all creatures." Now hardly had she made an end of her prayer and supplication when behold, she saw entering the gate of the horse-plain a young man, in shape like a willow branch, the comeliest of youths and the most accomplished, save that his face was wan and his form wasted by weariness. As he entered and came up to the tables, he found no seat vacant save that over against the dish of sweet rice, so he sat down there; and when Zumurrud looked upon him her heart fluttered and observing him narrowly she knew him for her lord Ali Shar, and was like to have cried out for joy, but restrained herself, fearing disgrace before the folk; and, albeit her bowels yearned over him and her heart beat wildly, she hid what she felt. Now the cause of his coming thither was on this wise. After he fell asleep upon the bench and Zumurrud let herself down to him and Jawan the Kurd seized her, he presently awoke and found himself lying with his head bare, so he knew that some one had come upon him and had robbed him of his turband whilst he slept. So he spoke the saying which shall never shame its sayer and which is, "Verily, we are Allah's and to Him are we returning!" and, going back to the old woman's house, knocked at the door. She came out and he wept before her, till he fell down in a fainting fit. Now when he came to himself, he told her all that had passed, and she blamed him and chid him for his foolish doings saying, "Verily thine affliction and calamity come from thyself." And she gave not over reproaching him, till the blood streamed from his nostrils and he again fainted away. When he recovered from his swoon—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ This tetrastich has occurred before: so I quote Mr. Payne (in loco).

² Shaykh of Al-Butnah and Jābiyah, therefore a Syrian of the Hauran near Damascus, and grandson to Isā (Esau). Arab mystics (unlike the vulgar, who see only his patience) recognise that inflexible integrity which refuses to utter "words of wind" and which would not, against his conscience, confess to wrong-doing merely to pacify the Lord, who was stronger than himself. The Classics taught this noble lesson in the case of Prometheus versus Zeus. Many articles are called after Job, e.g., Ra'arā' Ayyub or Ghubayrā (inula Arabica and undulata), a creeper with which he rubbed himself and got well — the Copts do the same on "Job's Wednesday," i.e., that before Whit Sunday, O.S. Job's father is a nickname of the camel, etc., etc.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Ali Shar recovered from his swoon he saw the old woman bewailing his griefs and weeping over him; so he complained of his hard lot and repeated these two couplets:—

How bitter to friends is a parting, • And a meeting how sweet to the lover!
Allah join all the lovers He parteth, • And save me who of love ne'er recover.¹

The old woman mourned over him and said to him, "Sit here, whilst I go in quest of news for thee and return to thee in haste." "To hear is to obey," answered he. So she left him on her good errand and was absent till mid-day, when she returned and said to him, "O Ali, I fear me thou must die in thy grief; thou wilt never see thy beloved again save on the bridge Al-Sirát¹; for the people of the Christian's house, when they arose in the morning, found the window giving on the garden torn from its hinges and Zumurrud missing, and with her a pair of saddle-bags full of the Christian's money. And when I came thither I saw the Chief of Police standing at the door, he and his many, and there is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great!" Now, as Ali Shar heard these words, the light in his sight was changed to the darkness of night and he despaired of life and made sure of death; nor did he leave weeping till he lost his senses. When he revived, love and longing were sore upon him; there befell him a grievous sickness and he kept his house a whole year, during which the old woman ceased not to bring him doctors and ply him with ptisanes and diet-drinks and make him savoury broths till, after the twelve-months ended, his life returned to him. Then he recalled what had passed and repeated these couplets:—

¹ Lane (in loco) renders "I am of their number." But "fi al-siyāk" means popularly " (driven) to the point of death."

Severance-grief nighmost, Union done to death, * Down-railing tear-drops, heart fire-tortureth!

Redoubleth pine in one that hath no peace * For love and wake and woe he suffereth:

O Lord, if there be thing to joy my soul * Deign Thou bestow it while I breathe my breath.

When the second year began, the old woman said to him, "O my son, all this thy weeping and wailing will not bring thee back thy mistress. Rise, therefore, gird the loins of resolution and seek for her in the lands: peradventure thou shalt light on some news of her." And she ceased not to exhort and hearten him, till he took courage and she carried him to the Hammam. Then she made him drink strong wine and eat white meats, and thus she did with him for a whole month till he regained strength; and setting out, journeyed without ceasing till he arrived at Zumurrud's city. where he went to the horse-course, and sat down before the dish of sweet rice and put out his hand to eat of it. Now when the folk saw this, they were concerned for him and said to him, "O young man, 'eat not of that dish, for whoso eateth thereof, misfortune befalleth him." Answered he, "Leave me to eat of it, and let them do with me what they will, so haply shall I be at rest from this wearying life." Accordingly he ate a first mouthful, and Zumurrud was minded to have him brought before her; but then she bethought her that belike he was an-hungered, and said to herself, "It were properer to let him eat his fill." So he went on eating, whilst the folk looked at him in astonishment, waiting to see what would betide him; and when he had satisfied himself Zumurrud said to certain of her eunuchry, "Go to yonder youth who eateth of the rice and bring him to me in courteous guise, saying:—Answer the summons of the King who would have a word with thee on some slight matter." They replied, "We hear and obey"; and going straightways up to Ali Shar, said to him, "O my lord, be pleased to answer the summons of the King and let thy heart be at ease." Quoth he, "Hearkening and obedience"; and followed the eunuchs,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Lit. = "pathway, road"; hence the bridge well known as "finer than a hair and sharper than a sword," over which all (except Khadijah and a chosen few) must pass on the Day of Doom; a Persian apparatus bodily annexed by Al-Islam. The old Guebres called it Pul-i-Chinávár or Chinávad, and the Jews borrowed it from them as they did all their fancies of a future life against which Moses had so gallantly fought. It is said that a bridge over the grisly "brook Kedron" was called Sirát (the road) and hence the idea, as that of hell-fire from Ge-Hinnom (Gehenna) where children were passed through the fire to Moloch. A doubtful Hadis says, "The Prophet declared Al-Sirát to be the name of a bridge over hell-fire, dividing Hell from Paradise" (pp. 17, 122, Reynold's trans. of Al-Siyuti's Traditions, etc.). In Koran, i. 5, "Sirát" is simply a path, from sarata, he swallowed, even as the way devours (makes a lakam or mouthful of) those who travel it. The word was orig. written with Sin but changed for easier articulation to Sád, one of the four Húrúf al-Mutabbakát (س, ص, ط and ب), "the flattened," formed by the broadened tongue in contact with the palate. This Sad also by the figure Ishmám (=conversion) turns slightly to a Zâ, the intermediate between Sin and Sad.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ali Shar rejoined, "Hearkening and obedience"; and followed the eunuchs, whilst the people said to one another, "There is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! I wonder what the King will do with him!" And others said, "He will do him naught but good, for had he intended to harm him he had not suffered him to eat his fill." Now when the Castratos set him in presence of Zumurrud he saluted and kissed the earth before her, whilst she returned his salutation and received him with honour. Then she asked him, "What may be thy name and trade, and what brought thee to our city?" and he answered, "O King, my name is Ali Shar; I am of the sons of the merchants of Khorasan; and the cause of my coming hither is to seek for a slave-girl whom I have lost, for she was dearer to me than my hearing and my seeing, and indeed my soul cleaveth to her, since I lost her; and such is my tale." So saying he wept, till he swooned away; whereupon she bade them sprinkle rose-water on his face, which they did till he revived, when she said, "Here with the table of sand and the brass pen." So they brought them, and she took the pen and struck a geomantic scheme which she considered awhile; and then cried, "Thou hast spoken sooth, Allah will grant thee speedy reunion with her; so be not troubled." Upon this she commanded her head-chamberlain to carry him to the bath and afterwards to clothe him in a handsome suit of royal apparel, and mount him on one of the best of the King's horses and finally bring him to the palace at the last of the day. So the Chamberlain, after saying "I hear and I obey," took him away, whilst the folk began to say to one another, "What maketh the King deal thus courteously with yonder youth?" And quoth one, "Did I not tell you that he would do him no hurt? for he is fair of aspect; and this I knew ever since the King suffered him to eat his fill." And each said his say; after which they all dispersed and went their ways. As for Zumrud, she thought the night would never come, that she might be alone with the beloved of her heart. As soon as it was dark she withdrew to her sleeping-chamber and made her attendants think her overcome with sleep; and it was her wont to suffer none to pass the night with her save those two little eunuchs who waited upon her. After a while, when she had composed herself, she sent for her dear Ali Shar and sat down upon the bed, with candles burning over her head and feet, and hanging lamps of gold lighting up the place like the rising sun. When the people heard of her sending for Ali Shar, they marvelled thereat and each man thought his thought and said his say; but one of them declared, "At all events the King is in love with this young man, and to-morrow he will make him generalissimo of the army." Now when they brought him in to her, he kissed ground between her hands, and called down blessings on her, and she said in her mind, "There is no help for it but that I jest with him awhile, before I make myself known to him."¹ Then she asked him, "O Ali, say me, hast thou been to the Hammam?" and he answered, "Yes, O my lord." Quoth she, "Come, eat of this chicken and meat, and drink of this wine and sherbet of sugar, for thou art weary; and after that come thou hither." "I hear and I obey," replied he, and did as she commanded him do. Now when he had made an end of eating and drinking, she said to him, "Come up with me on the couch and shampoo my feet." So he fell to rubbing feet and kneading calves, and found them softer than silk. Then said she, "Go higher with the massage"; and he, "Pardon me, O my lord, to the knee but no farther!" Whereupon quoth she, "Durst thou disobey me? it shall be an ill-omened night for thee!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The device of the banquet is dainty enough for any old Italian novella; all that now comes is pure Egyptian polissonnerie speaking to the gallery and being answered by roars of laughter.

² i.e. art thou ceremonially pure and therefore fit for handling by a great man like myself?

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Zumurrud cried to her lord Ali Shar, "Durst thou disobey me? it shall be an ill-omened night for thee! Nay, but it behoveth thee to do my bidding and I will make thee my minion and appoint thee one of my Emirs." Asked Ali Shar, "And in what must I do thy bidding, O King of the age? If thou force me thereto, verily I will accuse thee thereof before Allah on Resurrection-day. Take everything thou hast given me and let me go from thy city." And he wept and lamented; when Zumurrud burst out laughing and said to him, "O my lord, all this happeneth and yet thou knowest me not!" He asked, "And who art thou, O King?" and she answered, "I am thy slave-girl Zumurrud." Now whenas he knew this and was certified that she was indeed his very slave-girl Zumurrud, he kissed her and embraced her and threw himself upon her as the lion upon the lamb. And when the morrow came, Zumurrud summoned all the troops and the lords of the realm and said to them, "I am minded to journey to this man's country; so choose you a viceroy, who shall rule over you till I return to you." And they answered, "We hear and we obey." Then she applied herself to making ready the wants of the way, to wit, provant and provender, moneys and rarities for presents, camels and mules and so forth; after which she set out from her city with Ali Shar, and they ceased not faring on till they arrived at his native place, where he entered his house and gave many gifts to his friends and alms and largesse to the poor. And Allah vouchsafed him children by her, and they both lived the gladdest and happiest of lives till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Severer of societies and the Garnerer of graves. And glorified be He the Eternal without cease, and praised be He in every case. And amongst other tales they tell one of

THE LOVES OF JUBAYR BIN UMAYR AND THE LADY BUDUR.

IT is related that the Commander of the Faithful, Harun al-Rashid, was uneasy¹ one night and could not sleep; so that he ceased not to toss from side to side for very restlessness, till growing weary of this, he called Masrur and said to him, "Ho, Masrur, find me some one who may solace me in this my wakefulness." He answered, "O Prince of True Believers, wilt thou walk in the palace-garden and divert thyself with the sight of its blooms and gaze upon the stars and constellations and note the beauty of their ordinance, and the moon among them rising in sheen over the water?" Quoth the Caliph, "O Masrur, my heart inclineth not to aught of this." Quoth he, "O my lord, there are in thy palace three hundred concubines, each of whom hath her separate chamber. Do thou bid all and every retire into her own apartment and then do thou go thy rounds and amuse thyself with gazing on them without their knowledge." The Caliph replied, "O Masrur, the palace is my palace and the girls are my property: furthermore, my soul inclineth not to aught of this." Then Masrur rejoined, "O my lord, summon the doctors of law and religion and the sages of science and poets, and bid them contend before thee in argument and disputation, and recite to thee songs and verses and tell thee tales and anecdotes." Replied the Caliph, "My soul inclineth not to aught of this"; and Masrur rejoined, "O my lord, bid pretty boys and the wits and the cup-companions attend thee and solace thee with witty sallies." "O Masrur," ejaculated the Caliph, "indeed my soul inclineth not to aught of this." "Then, O my lord," cried Masrur, "strike off my head";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Lane (ii. 494) relates from Al-Makrizi, that when Khamârawayh, Governor of Egypt (ninth century), suffered from insomnia his physician ordered a pool of quicksilver, 50 by 50 cubits, to be laid out in front of his palace, now the Rumaylah square. "At the corners of the pool were silver pegs to which were attached by silver rings strong bands of silk, and a bed of skins inflated with air being thrown upon the pool and secured by the bands remained in a continual state of agreeable vacillation." We are not told that the Prince was thereby salivated like the late Colonel Sykes when boiling his mercury for thermometric experiments.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Masrur cried out to the Caliph, "O my lord, strike off my head; haply that will dispel thine unease and do away the restlessness that is upon thee." So Al-Rashid laughed at his saying and said, "See which of the boon-companions is at the door." Thereupon he went out and returning, said, "O my lord, he who sits without is Ali bin Mansúr of Damascus, the Wag.¹" "Bring him to me," quoth Harun: and Masrur went out and returned with Ibn Mansur, who said, on entering, "Peace be with thee, O Commander of the Faithful!" The Caliph returned his salutation and said to him, "O Ibn Mansur, tell us some of thy stories." Said the other, "O Commander of the Faithful, shall I tell thee what I have seen with my eyes or what I have only heard tell?" Replied the Caliph, "If thou have seen aught worth telling, let us hear it; for hearing is not like seeing." Said Ibn Mansur, "O Commander of the Faithful, lend me thine ear and thy heart"; and he answered, "O Ibn Mansur, behold, I am listening to thee with mine ears and looking at thee with mine eyes and attending to thee with my heart." So Ibn Mansur began:—Know then, O Commander of the Faithful, that I receive a yearly allowance from Mohammed bin Sulaymán al-Háshimi, Sultan of Bassorah; so I went to him, once upon a time, as usual, and found him ready to ride out hunting and birding. I saluted him and he returned my salute, and said, "O son of Mansur, mount and come with us to the chase": but I said, "O my lord, I can no longer ride; so do thou station me in the guest-house and give thy chamberlains and lieutenants charge over me." And he did so and departed for his sport. His people entreated me with the utmost honour and entertained me with the greatest hospitality; but said I to myself, "By Allah, it is a strange thing that for so long I have been in the habit of coming from Baghdad to Bassorah, withal know no more of this town than from palace to garden and from garden to palace; when shall I find an occasion like this to view the different parts and quarters of Bassorah? I will rise forthwith and walk forth alone and divert myself and digest what I have eaten."

¹ The name seems now unknown. "Al-Khalí'a" is somewhat stronger than "Wag," meaning at least a "wicked wit." Properly it is the Span. "perdido," a youth cast off (Khala') by his friends; though not so strong a term as "Harfush"—a blackguard.

Accordingly I donned my richest dress and went out a-walking about Bassorah. Now it is known to thee, O Commander of the Faithful, that it hath seventy streets, each seventy leagues¹ long, the measure of Al-Irak; and I lost myself in its by-streets and thirst overcame me. Presently, as I went along, O Prince of True Believers, behold, I came to a great door, whereon were two rings of brass,² with curtains of red brocade drawn before it. And on either side of the door was a stone bench and over it was a trellis, covered with a creeping vine that hung down and shaded the doorway. I stood still to gaze upon the place, and presently heard a sorrowful voice, proceeding from a heart which did not rejoice, singing melodiously and chanting these cinquains:—

My body bides the sad abode of grief and malady, * Caused by a fawn whose land and home are in a far countrie :
O ye two Zephyrs of the wold which caused such pain in me * By Allah, Lord of you ! to him my heart's desire, go ye
And chide him so perchance ye soften him I pray.

And tell us all his words if he to hear your speech shall deign, * And unto him the tidings bear of lovers 'twixt you twain :
And both vouchsafe to render me a service free and fain, * And lay my case before him showing how I e'er complain:
And say, " What ails thy bounden thrall this wise to drive away,

Without a fault committed and without a sin to show ; * Or heart that leans to other wight or would thy love forego :
Or treason to our plighted troth or causing thee a throe ? " * And if he smile then say ye twain in accents soft and slow,
" An thou to him a meeting grant 'twould be the kindest way !

For he is gone distraught for thee, as well, indeed, he might * His eyes are wakeful and he weeps and wails the livelong night " ;
If seem he satisfied by this why then 'tis well and right, * But if he show an angry face and treat ye with despite, Trick him and " Naught we know of him ! " I beg you both to say.

Quoth I to myself, " Verily, if the owner of this voice be fair, she conjoineth beauty of person and eloquence and sweetness of voice." Then I drew near the door, and began raising the

¹ Arab "Farsakh" = parasang.

² Arab. "Nahás asfar" = yellow copper, brass as opposed to Nahás ahmar = copper. The reader who cares to study the subject will find much about it in my "Book of the Sword," chapt. iv.

³ Lane (ii 479) translates one stanza of this mukhammas (pentastich) and speaks of "five more," which would make six.

curtain little by little, when lo, I beheld a damsel white as a full moon when it mooneth on its fourteenth night, with joined eyebrows twain and languorous lids of eyne, breasts like pomegranates twin and dainty lips like double carnelian, a mouth as it were the seal of Solomon, and teeth ranged in a line that played with the reason of proser and rhymer, even as saith the poet:—

O pearly month of friend, who set those pretty pearls in line, * And filled thee full of whitest chamomile and reddest wine?
Who lent the morning-glory in thy smile to shimmer and shine * Who with that ruby-padlock dared thy lips to seal and sign!
Who looks on thee at early morn with stress of joy and bliss * Goes mad for aye, what then of him who wins a kiss of thine?

And as saith another:—

O pearl-set mouth of friend * Pity poor Ruby's cheek;
Boast not o'er one who owns * Thee, union and unique!

In brief, she comprised all varieties of loveliness and was a seduction to men and women, nor could the gazer satisfy himself with the sight of her charms; for she was as the poet hath said of her:—

When come she, slays she; and when back she turn, * She makes all men regard with loving eyes:
A very sun! a very moon! but still * From hurt and harmful ills her nature flies, Opes Eden's garden when she show herself; * And full moon see we o'er her necklace rise.

Now as I was looking at her through an opening of the curtain, behold, she turned, and seeing me standing at the door, said to her handmaid, "See who is at the door." So the slave-girl came up to me and said, "O Shaykh, hast thou no shame, or do impudent airs suit hoary hairs?" Quoth I, "O my mistress, I confess to the hoary hairs; but as for impudent airs I think not to be guilty of unmannerliness." Then the mistress broke in, "And what can be more unmannerly than to intrude thyself upon a house other than thy house, and gaze on a Harim other than thy Harim?" I pleaded, "O my lady, I have an excuse"; and when she asked, "And what is thine excuse?" I answered, "I am a stranger, and so thirsty that I am well-nigh dead of thirst." She rejoined, "We accept thine excuse," — And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the young lady rejoined, "We accept thine excuse," and calling one of her slave-maids, said to her, "O Lutf,¹ give him to drink in the golden tankard." So she brought me a tankard of red gold, set with pearls and gems of price, full of water mingled with virgin musk and covered with a napkin of green silk; and I addressed myself to drink and was long about my drinking, for I stole glances at her the while, till I could prolong my stay no longer. Then I returned the tankard to the girl, but did not offer to go; and she said to me, "O Shaykh, wend thy way." But I said, "O my lady, I am troubled in mind." She asked me, "For what?" and I answered, "For the turns of Time and the change of things." Replied she, "Well mayst thou be troubled thereat for Time breedeth wonders. But what hast thou seen of such surprises that thou shouldst muse upon them?" Quoth I, "I was thinking of the whilom owner of this house, for he was my intimate in his lifetime." Asked she, "What was his name?" and I answered, "Mohammed bin Ali the Jeweller, and he was a man of great wealth. Tell me, did he leave any children?" Said she, "Yes, he left a daughter, Budur by name, who inherited all his wealth?" Quoth I, "Meseemeth thou art his daughter?" "Yes," answered she, laughing; then added, "O Shaykh, thou hast talked long enough; now wend thy ways." Replied I, "Needs must I go, but I see thy charms are changed by being out of health; so tell me thy case; it may be Allah will give thee comfort at my hands." Rejoined she, "O Shaykh, if thou be a man of discretion, I will discover to thee my secret; but first tell me who thou art, that I may know whether thou art worthy of confidence or not; for the poet saith²:—

None keepeth a secret but a faithful person: with the best of mankind it remaineth concealed.

I have kept my secret in a house with a lock, whose key is lost and whose door is sealed.

Thereto I replied, "O my lady, an thou wouldest know who I am, I am Ali bin Mansur of Damascus, the Wag, cup-companion

¹ A servile name, Delicacy, Elegance.

² These verses have occurred twice; (vol. i. night ix., etc.) so I give Lane's version (ii. 482).

to the Commander of the Faithful, Harun al-Rashid." Now when she heard my name, she came down from her seat and saluting me, said, "Welcome, O Ibn Mansur! Now will I tell thee my case and entrust thee with my secret. I am a lover separated from her beloved." I answered, "O my lady, thou art fair and shouldest be on love-terms with none but the fair. Whom, then, dost thou love?" Quoth she, "I love Jubayr bin Umayr al-Shaybání, Emir of the Banú Shaybán¹"; and she described to me a young man than whom there was no prettier fellow in Bassorah. I asked, "O my lady, have interviews or letters passed between you?" and she answered, "Yes, but our love was tongue-love, not heart and soul-love; for he kept not his trust nor was he faithful to his troth." Said I, "O my lady, and what was the cause of your separation?" and she replied, "I was sitting one day whilst my handmaid here combed my hair. When she had made an end of combing it, she plaited my tresses, and my beauty and loveliness charmed her; so she bent over me and kissed my cheek.² At that moment he came in unawares, and, seeing the girl kiss my cheek, straightways turned away in anger, vowing eternal separation and repeating these two couplets:—

If another share in the thing I love, * I abandon my love and live lorn of love.

My beloved is worthless if aught she will, * Save that which her lover doth most approve.

And from the time he left me to this present hour, O Ibn Mansur, he hath neither written to me nor answered my letters." Quoth I, "And what purposest thou to do?" Quoth she, "I have a mind to send him a letter by thee. If thou bring me back an answer, thou shalt have of me five hundred gold pieces; and if not, then an hundred for thy trouble in going and coming." I answered, "Do what seemeth good to thee; I hear and I obey thee." Whereupon she called to one of her slave-girls, "Bring me ink-case and paper," and she wrote thereon these couplets:—

Beloved, why this strangeness, why this hate? * When shall thy pardon reunite us two?

¹ The Badawi tribe to which belonged the generous Ma'an bin Za'idah, often mentioned in The Nights.

² Wealthy harems, I have said, are hot-beds of Sapphism and Tribadism. Every woman past her first youth has a girl whom she calls her "Myrtle" (in Damascus). At Agbome, capital of Dahome, I found that a troop of women was kept for the use of the "Amazons" (Mission to Gelele, ii. 73). Amongst the wild Arabs, who ignore Socratic and Sapphic perversions, the lover is always more jealous of his beloved's girl-friends than of men rivals.

Why dost thou turn from me in severance * Thy face is not the face
 I wont to know.
 Yea, slanderers falsed my words, and thou to them * Inclining, madest spite and envy grow.
 An hast believed their tale, the Heavens forbid * Now thou believe it when dost better trow!
 By thy life tell what hath reached thine ear; * Thou know'st what said they and so justice show.
 An it be true I spoke the words, my words * Admit interpreting and change allow:
 Given that the words of Allah were revealed, * Folk changed the Torah¹ and still changing go:
 What slanders told they of mankind before! * Jacob heard Joseph blamed by tongue of foe.
 Yea, for myself and slanderer and thee * An awful day of reckoning there shall be.

Then she sealed the letter and gave it to me; and I took it and carried it to the house of Jubayr bin Umayr, whom I found absent a-hunting. So I sat down to wait for him; and behold, he returned from the chase; and when I saw him, O Prince of True Believers, come riding up, my wit was confounded by his beauty and grace. As soon as he sighted me sitting at the house-door, he dismounted and coming up to me embraced me and saluted me; and mesecmed I embraced the world and all therein. Then he carried me into his house and seating me on his own couch, called for food. They brought a table of Khalanj-wood of Khorasan with feet of gold, whereon were all manners of meats, fried and roasted and the like. So I seated myself at the table and examining it with care found these couplets engraved upon it²:—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirtieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ali son of Mansur continued:—So I seated myself at the table of Jubayr bin Umayr al-Shaybani and, examining it with care, found these couplets engraved upon it:—

¹ The Hebrew Pentateuch; Roll of the Law.

² I need hardly notice the brass trays, platters, and table-covers with inscriptions which are familiar to every reader: those made in the East for foreign markets mostly carry imitation inscriptions lest infidel eyes fall upon Holy Writ.

On these which once were chicks,
Your mourning glances fix,
Late dwellers in the mansion of the cup,
Now nearly eaten up !
Let tears bedew
The memory of that stew,
Those partridges, once roast,
Now lost !

The daughters of the grouse in plaintive strain ;
Bemourn, and still bemourn, and mourn again !

The children of the fry,
We lately saw
Half smothered in pilau,
With buttery mutton fritters smoking by !
Alas ! my heart, the fish !
Who filled his dish,

With flaky form in varying colours spread
On the round pastry cake of household bread !
Heaven sent us that kabob !

For no one could (Save Heaven he should rob)
Produce a thing so excellently good,
Or give us roasted meat

With basting oil so savourily replete !
But, oh ! mine appetite, alas ! for thee !
Who on that furmeaty

So sharpset wast a little while ago—
That furmeaty, which mashed by hands of snow,
A light reflection bore,
Of the bright bracelets that those fair hands wore ;
Again remembrance glads my sense
With visions of its excellence !

Again I see the cloth unrolled
Rich worked in many a varied fold !
Be patient, oh ! my soul, they say
Fortune rules all that's new and strange,
And though she pinches us to-day,
To-morrow brings full rations, and a change¹ !

Then said Jubayr, "Put forth thy hand to our food and ease our heart by eating of our victual." Answered I, "By Allah, I will not eat a mouthful till thou grant me my desire." He asked, "What is thy desire ?" so I brought out the letter and gave it to him ; but, when he had read it and mastered its contents, he tore it in pieces and throwing it on the floor, said to me, "O Ibn Mansur, I will grant thee whatever thou askest save thy desire which concerneth the writer of this letter, for I have no answer to her." At this I rose in anger; but he caught hold of my skirts, saying, "O Ibn Mansur, I will tell thee what she said to thee, albeit I was not present with you." I asked, "And what did she say to me?" and he answered, "Did not the writer of this letter say to thee, If thou bring me back an answer, thou shalt have of me five hundred ducats; and if not, an hundred for thy pains?" "Yes," replied I; and he rejoined, "Abide with me this day and eat and drink and enjoy thyself and make merrily, and thou shalt have thy five hundred ducats." So I sat with him and ate and drank and made merry and enjoyed myself and entertained him with talk deep into the night¹; after which I said to him, "O my master, is there no music in thy house?" He answered, "Verily for many a day we have drunk without music." Then he called out, saying, "Ho, Shajarat al-Durr!" Whereupon a slave-girl answered him from her chamber and came in to us, with a lute of Hindu make, wrapped in a silken bag. And she sat down and, laying the lute in her lap, preluded in one-and-twenty modes; then, returning to the first, she sang to a lively measure these couplets:—

¹ These six distichs are in vol. i. night xiii. I borrow Torrens (p. 125) to show his peculiar treatment of spinning out 12 lines to 38.

Whoso ne'er tasted of Love's sweet and bitter draught. * No difference kens 'twixt presence-bliss and absence-stress;
And so, who hath declined from Love's true road, * No difference kens
'twixt smooth and ruggedness:
I ceased not to oppose the votaries of love * Till I had tried its sweets and bitters not the less:
How many a night my pretty friend conversed with me * And sipped
I from his lips honey of love-licse:
Now have I drunk its cup of bitterness, until * To bondman and to freedman I have proved me base.
How short-aged was the night together we enjoyed, * When seemed it Daybreak came upon Night's heel to press!
But fate had vowed to disunite us lovers twain, * And she too well hath kept her vow, that votaress.
Fate so decreed it! None her sentence can withstand: * Where is the wight who dares oppose his Lord's command?

¹ Arab. 'Musámarah' = chatting at night. Easterns are inordinately fond of the practice, and the wild Arabs often sit up till dawn, talking over the affairs of the tribe: indeed a Shaykh is expected to do so. "Early to bed and early to rise" is a civilised not a savage or a barbarous saying. Samir is a companion in night talk; Rafik of the road; Rahib in riding horse or camel; Ká'id in sitting; Sharib and Rafis at drink, and Nadim at table. Ahid is an ally, and Sharik a partner—all on the model of "Fa'il."

Hardly had she finished her verses, when her lord cried out with a great cry and fell down in a fit; whereupon exclaimed the damsel, "May Allah not punish thee, O old man! This long time have we drunk without music, for fear the like of this falling sickness befall our lord. But now go thou to yonder chamber and there sleep." So I went to the chamber which she showed me, and slept till the morning, when behold, a page brought me a purse of five hundred dinars and said to me, "This is what my master promised thee; but return thou not to the damsel who sent thee, and let it be as though neither thou nor we had ever heard of this matter." "Hearkening and obedience," answered I, and taking the purse went my way. Still I said to myself, "The lady must have expected me since yesterday; and by Allah there is no help but I return to her and tell her what passed between me and him, otherwise she will revile me and revile all who come from my country." So I went to her and found her standing behind the door; and when she saw me she said, "O Ibn Mansur, thou hast done nothing for me!" I asked, "Who told thee of this?" and she answered, "O Ibn Mansur, yet another thing hath been revealed to me¹ and it is that, when thou handedst him the letter, he tore it in pieces and, throwing it on the floor, said to thee:—O Ibn Mansur, I will grant thee whatever thou askest save thy desire which concerneth the writer of this letter; for I have no answer to her missive. Then didst thou rise from beside him in anger; but he laid hold of thy skirts, saying:—O son of Mansur, abide with me to-day, for thou art my guest, and eat and drink and make merry; and thou shalt have thy five hundred ducats. So thou didst sit with him, eating and drinking and making merry, and entertainedst him with talk deep into the night, and a slave-girl sang such an air and such verses, whereupon he fell down in a fit." So, O Commander of the Faithful, I asked her, "Wast thou then with us?" And she answered, "O Ibn Mansur, hast thou not heard the saying of the poet:—

The hearts of lovers have eyes I ken, • Which see the unseen by vulgar men.

However, O Ibn Mansur, the night and day shift not upon anything but they bring change thereto."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ In both lover and beloved the excess of love gave them th' clairvoyance.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the lady exclaimed, "O Ibn Mansur, the night and the day shift not upon anything but they bring change thereto!" Then she raised her glance to heaven and said, "O my God and my Leader and my Lord, like as Thou hast afflicted me with love of Jubayr bin Umayr, even so do Thou afflict him with love of me, and transfer the passion from my heart to his heart!" Then she gave me an hundred sequins for my trouble in going and coming and I took them and returned to the palace, where I found the Sultan come home from the chase; so I got my pension of him and fared back to Baghdad. And when next year came I repaired to Bassorah, as usual, to seek my pension, and the Sultan paid it to me; but, as I was about to return to Baghdad, I bethought me of the Lady Budur, and said to myself, "By Allah, I must needs go to her and see what hath befallen between her and her lover!" So I went to her house and finding the street before her door swept and sprinkled and eunuchs and servants and pages standing before the entrance, said to myself, "Most like grief hath broken the lady's heart and she is dead, and some Emir or other hath taken up his abode in her house." So I left it and went on to the house of Jubayr, son of Umayr the Shaybani, where I found the benches of the porch broken down and ne'er a page at the door, as of wont, and said to myself, "Haply he too is dead." Then I stood still before the door of his house, and with my eyes running over with tears bemoaned it in these couplets:—

O Lords of me, who fared but whom my heart e'er followeth * Return; and so my festal days with you shall be renewed!

I stand before the home of you, bewailing your abode; * Quiver mine eyelids and my eyes with tears are ever dewed;

I ask the house and its remains that seem to weep and wail, * "Where is the man who whillome wont to lavish goods and good?"

With, "Go, wend thy way; those friends like travellers have ared * From Springtide-camp, and buried lie of earth and worms be food!"

ne'er desolate us so we lose their virtues' light * In length and cadth, but ever be the light in spirit viewed!

O Prince of True Believers, was thus keening over the folk

The prayer will be granted for the excess (not the purity) of her love.

of the house,¹ behold, out came a black slave therefrom and said to me, "Hold thy peace, O Shaykh! May thy mother be reft of thee! Why do I see thee bemoaning the house on this wise?" Quoth I, "I frequented it of yore, when it belonged to a good friend of mine." Asked the slave, "What was his name?" and I answered, "Jubayr bin Umayr the Shaybani." Rejoined he, "And what hath befallen him? Praised be Allah, he is yet here with us in the enjoyment of property and rank and prosperity, except that Allah hath stricken him with love of a damsel called the Lady Budur; and he is so whelmed by his love of her and his longing for her that he is like a great rock cumbering the ground. If he hunger, he saith not, Give me meat; nor, if he thirst, doth he say, Give me drink." Quoth I, "Ask leave for me to go in to him." Said the slave, "O my lord, wilt thou go in to one who understandeth or to one who understandeth not?" and I said, "There is no help for it but I see him whatever be the case." Accordingly he went in to ask, and presently returned with permission for me to enter, whereupon I went in to Jubayr and found him like a rock that cumbereth the ground, understanding neither sign nor speech; and when I spoke to him he answered me not. Then said one of his servants, "O my lord, if thou remember aught of verse, repeat it and raise thy voice; and he will be aroused by this and speak with thee." So I versified in these two couplets:—

Hast quit the love of moons² or dost persist? • Dost wake o' nights or close in sleep thine eyes?
If aye thy tears in torrents flow, then learn • Eternal thou shalt dwell in Paradise.³

When he heard these verses he opened his eyes and said, "Welcome, O son of Mansur! Verily the jest is become earnest." Quoth I, "O my lord, is there aught thou wouldst have me do for thee?" Answered he, "Yes, I would fain write her a letter and send it to her by thee. If thou bring me back her answer, thou shalt have of me a thousand dinars; and if not, two hundred for thy pains." So I said, "Do what seemeth good to thee";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ This wailing over the past is one of the common-places of Badawi poetry. The traveller cannot fail, I repeat, to notice the chronic melancholy of peoples dwelling under the brightest skies.

² Moons = Budur: in Paradise as a martyr.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ibn Mansur continued :—So I said, “Do what seemeth good to thee”; where-upon he called to one of his slave-girls, “Bring me ink-case and paper”; and wrote these couplets :—

I pray in Allah's name, O Princess mine, be light * On me, for Love hath robbed me of my reason's sight !

'Slaved me this longing and enthralled me love of you ; * And clad in sickness garb, a poor and abject wight.

I wot ere this to think small things of Love and hold, * O Princess mine, 'twas silly thing and over-slight.

But when it showed me swelling surges of its sea, * To Allah's best I bowed and pitied lovers' plight.

An will you, pity show and deign a meeting grant ; * An will you, kill me still forget not good requite.¹

Then he sealed the letter and gave it to me. So I took it and, repairing to Budur's house, raised the door-curtain little by little, as before, and looking in behold, I saw ten damsels, high-bosomed virgins, like moons, and the Lady Budur as she were the full moon among the stars, sitting in their midst, or the sun, when it is clear of clouds and mist ; nor was there on her any trace of pain or care. And as I looked and marvelled at her case, she turned her glance upon me and, seeing me standing at the door, said to me, “Well come and welcome and all hail to thee, O Ibn Mansur! Come in.” So I entered and saluting her gave her the letter; and she read it and when she understood it, she said laughingly to me, “O Ibn Mansur, the poet lied not when he sang :—

Indeed I'll bear my love for thee with firmest soul, * Until from thee to me shall come a messenger.

Look'ye, O Ibn Mansur, I will write thee an answer, that he may give thee what he promised thee.” And I answered, “Allah requite thee with good!” So she called out to a handmaid, “Bring ink-case and paper,” and wrote these couplets :—

How comes it I fulfilled my vow the while that vow broke you ? * And, seen me lean to equity, iniquity wrought you ?

'Twas you initiated wrongous dealing and despite ; * You were the treachetour and treason came from only you !

I never ceased to cherish mid the sons of men my troth ; * And keep your honour brightest bright and swear by name of you,

¹ i. e., to intercede for me in Heaven ; as if the young woman were the Prophet.

Until I saw with eyes of me what evil you had done; * Until I heard with ears of me what foul report spread you.

Shall I bring low my proper worth while raising yours so high? * By Allah, had you honoured me eke I had honoured you!

But now uprooting severance I will fain console my heart, * And wring my fingers clean of you for evermore to part!

Quoth I, "By Allah, O my lady, between him and death there is but the reading of this letter!" So I tore it in pieces and said to her, "Write him other than these lines." "I hear and obey," answered she, and wrote the following couplets:—

Indeed I am consolèd now and sleep without a tear, * And all that happened slandering tongues have whispered in mine ear:

My heart obeyed my hest and soon forgot thy memory, * And learnt mine eyelids 'twas the best to live in severance sheer:

He lied who said that severance is a bitterer thing than gall: * It never disappointed me; like wine I find it cheer:

I learnt to hate all news of thee, e'en mention of thy name, * And turn away and look thereon with loathing pure and mere:

Lookye! I cast thee out of heart and far from vitals mine; * Then let the slanderer wot this truth and see I am sincere.

Quoth I, "By Allah, O my lady, when he shall read these verses, his soul will depart his body!" Quoth she, "O Ibn Mansur, is passion indeed come to such a pass with him that thou sayest this saying?" Quoth I, "Had I said more than this verily it were but the truth; but mercy is of the nature of the noble." Now when she heard this her eyes brimmed over with tears and she wrote him a note, I swear by Allah, O Commander of the Faithful, there is none in thy Chancery could write the like of it; and therein were these couplets:—

How long shall I thy coyness and thy great aversion see? * Thou hast satisfied my censurers and pleased their enmity:

I did amiss and wot it not; so deign to tell me now * Whatso they told thee, haply 'twas the merest calumny.

I wish to welcome thee, dear love, even as welcome I * Sleep to these eyes and eyelids in the place of sleep to be.

And since 'tis thou hast made me drain th'unmixed cup of love, * If me thou see with wine bemused heap not thy blame on me!

And when she had written the missive,—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Budur had written the missive, she sealed it and gave it to me; and I said, "O my lady, in good sooth, this thy letter will make the sick man whole and ease the thirsting soul." Then I took it and went from her, when she called me back and said to me, "O son of Mansur, say to him:—She will be thy guest this night." At this I joyed with exceeding great joy and carried the letter to Jubayr, whom I found with his eyes fixed intently on the door, expecting the reply, and as soon as I gave him the letter and he opened and read it and understood it, he uttered a great cry and fell down in a fainting fit. When he came to himself, he said to me, "O Ibn Mansur, did she indeed write this note with her hand and feel it with her fingers?" Answered I, "O my lord, do folk write with their feet?" And by Allah, O Commander of the Faithful, I had not done speaking these words, when we heard the tinkle-tinkle of her anklets in the vestibule, and she entered. And seeing her he sprang to his feet as though nothing pained or ailed him, and embraced her like the letter L embraced the letter A¹; and the infirmity, that erst would not depart, at once left him.² Then he sat down, but she abode standing and I said to her, "O my lady, why dost thou not sit?" Said she, "O Ibn Mansur, save on a condition that is between us, I will not sit." I asked, "And what is that?" and she answered, "None may know lovers' secrets," and putting her mouth to Jubayr's ear whispered to him; whereupon he replied, "I hear and I obey." Then he rose and said somewhat in a whisper to one of his slaves, who went out and returned in a little while with a Kazi and two witnesses. Thereupon Jubayr stood up and taking a bag containing an hundred thousand dinars, said, "O Kazi, marry me to this young lady and write this sum to her marriage-settlement." Quoth the Kazi to her, "Say thou, I consent to this." "I consent to this," quoth she, whereupon he drew up the contract of marriage and she opened the bag; and, taking out a handful of gold, gave it to the Kazi and the witnesses and handed the rest to Jubayr. Thereupon the Kazi and the witnesses withdrew, and I sat with

¹ The comparison is admirable as the two letters are thus written Y or Y. It occurs in Al-Īḥārī (Ass. of Ramlah) —

So I embraced him close as Lām cleaves to Alif;

And again:—

She laid aside reluctance and I embraced her close

As if I were Lām and my love Alif.

The Lomad-Olaph in Syriac is similarly colligated.

² Here is a double entendre "and the infirm letters (viz., a, w and y) not subject to accident, left him." The three make up the root "Awī" = pitying, condoling.

them in mirth and merriment till the most part of the night was past, when I said in my mind, "These are lovers and they have been this long while separated. I will now rise and go sleep in some place afar from them and leave them to their privacy, one with other." So I rose, but she caught hold of my skirts, saying, "What thinkest thou to do?" "Nothing but so and so," answered I; upon which she rejoined, "Sit thee down; and when we would be rid of thee, we will send thee away." So I sat down with them till near daybreak, when she said to me, "O Ibn Mansur, go to yonder chamber; for we have furnished it for thee and it is thy sleeping-place." Thereupon I arose and went thither and slept till morning, when a page brought me basin and ewer, and I made the ablution and prayed the dawn-prayer. Then I sat down and presently, behold, Jubayr and his beloved came out of the bath in the house, and I saw them both wringing their locks.¹ So I wished them good morning and gave them joy of their safety and reunion, saying to Jubayr, "That which began with constraint and conditions hath ended in cordial contentment." He answered, "Thou sayest well, and indeed thou deservest thy honorarium"; and he called his treasurer, and said, "Bring hither three thousand dinars." So he brought a purse containing the gold pieces and Jubayr gave it to me, saying, "Favour us by accepting this." But I replied, "I will not accept it till thou tell me the manner of the transfer of love from her to thee, after so huge an aversion." Quoth he, "Hearkening and obedience! Know that we have a festival called New Year's Day,² when all the people fare forth and take boat and go a-pleasuring on the river. So I went out with my comrades, and saw a skiff wherein were ten damsels like moons, and amongst them the Lady Budur lute in hand. She preluded in eleven modes, then, returning to the first, sang these two couplets:—

¹ Showing that consummation had taken place. It was a sign of good breeding to avoid all "indecent hurry" when going to bed. In some Moslem countries the bridegroom does not consummate the marriage for seven nights, out of respect for (1) father (2) mother (3) brother and so forth. If he hurry matters he will be hooted as an "impatient man" and the wise will quote, "Man is created of precipitation" (Koran, chapt. xxi. 38), meaning hasty and inconsiderate. I remark with pleasure that the whole of this tale is told with commendable delicacy. O sisic omnia!

² Pers. Nauroz (= nau roz, new day): here used in the Arab. plur. "Nawáriz" as it lasted six days. There are only four universal festivals; the solstices and the equinoxes; and every successive religion takes them from the sun and perverts them to its own private purposes. Lane (ii. 496) derives the venerable Nauroz, whose birth is hid in the outer glooms of antiquity from, the Jewish Passover" (!).

Fire is cooler than fires in my breast, * Rock is softer than heart of my lord, Marvel I that he's formèd to hold * In water-soft frame heart rock-hard!

Said I to her:—Repeat the couplets and the air! But she would not ";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Jubayr continued, "So cried I to her:—Repeat the couplets and the air! But she would not; whereupon I bade the boatmen pelt her with oranges, and they pelted her till we feared her boat would founder. Then she went her way, and this is how the love was transferred from her heart to mine." So I wished them joy of their union; and taking the purse with its contents I returned to Baghdad. Now when the Caliph heard Ibn Mansur's story his heart was lightened and the restlessness and oppression from which he suffered forsook him. And they also tell the tale of

THE MAN OF AL-YAMAN AND HIS SIX SLAVE-GIRLS.

THE Caliph Al-Maamun was sitting one day in his palace, surrounded by his Lords of the realm and Officers of state, and there were present also before him all his poets and cup-companions, amongst the rest one named Mohammed of Bassorah. Presently the Caliph turned and said to him, "O Mohammed, I wish thee forthwith to tell me something that I have never before heard." He replied, "O Commander of the Faithful, dost thou wish me to tell thee a thing I have heard with my ears or a thing I have seen with my eyes?" Quoth Al-Maamun, "Tell me whichever is the rarer"; so Mohammed al-Basri began:—Know then, O Commander of the Faithful, that there lived once upon a time a wealthy man, who was a native of Al-Yaman; but he emigrated from his native land and came to this city of Baghdad, whose sojourn so pleased him that he transported hither his family and possessions. Now he had six slave-girls, like moons one and all; the first white, the second brown, the third fat, the fourth lean, the fifth yellow, and the sixth lamp-black; and all six were comely of countenance and perfect in accomplishments, and skilled in the arts of singing and playing upon musical instruments. Now it so chanced that, one day, he sent for the girls and called for meat and wine; and they ate and drank and were mirthful and made merry. Then he filled the cup and, taking it in his hand, said to the blonde girl, "O new-moon face, let us hear somewhat of thy pleasant songs." So she took the lute and tuning it made music thereon with such sweet melody that the place danced with glee; after which she played a lively measure and sang these couplets:—

I have a friend, whose form is fixed within mine eyes,¹ * Whose name deep buried in my very vitals lies:

Whenas remembers him my mind all heart am I, * And when on him my gaze is turned I am all eyes.

My censor saith, "Forswear, forget, the love of him," * "Whatso is not to be, how shall't be?"—my reply is.

Quoth I, "O Censor mine, go forth from me, avaunt! * And make not light of that on mortals heavy lies."

Hereat their master rejoiced and drinking off his cup, gave the damsels to drink, after which he said to the berry-brown girl, "O brazier-light² and joy of the sprite, let us hear thy lovely voice, whereby all that hearken are ravished with delight." So she took the lute and thereon made harmony till the place was moved to glee; then, captivating all hearts with her graceful swaying, she sang these couplets:—

I swear by that fair face's life, I'll love but thee * Till death us part;
nor other love but thine I'll see:

O full moon, with thy loveliness mantilla'd o'er, * The loveliest of our earth beneath thy banner be:

Thou, who surpassest all the fair in pleasantness * May Allah, Lord of worlds, be everywhere with thee!

The master rejoiced and drank off his cup and gave the girls to drink; after which he filled again; and, taking the goblet in his hand, signed to the fat girl and bade her sing and play a different motive. So she took the lute, and striking a grief-dispelling measure, sang these couplets:—

¹ Again the "babes" of the eyes.

² i.e. whose glance is as the light of the glowing braise or (embers) The Arab. "Mikbās" = pan or pot full of small charcoal, is an article well known in Italy and Southern Europe. The word is apparently used here because it rhymes with "Anfās" (souls, spirits).

An thou but deign consent, O wish to heart affied ! * I care not wrath and rage to all mankind betide.

And if thou show that fairest face which gives me life, * I reckon not an diminished heads the Kings go hide.

I seek thy favours only from this 'versal world : * O thou in whom all beauty doth firm-fixt abide !

The man rejoiced and emptying his cup, gave the girls to drink.
Then he signed to the thin girl and said to her, "O Hourî of Paradise, feed thou our ears with sweet words and sounds." So she took the lute ; and, tuning it, preluded and sang these two couplets :—

Say me, on Allah's path¹ hast death not dealt to me, * Turning from me while I to thee turn patiently :

Say me, is there no judge of Love to judge us twain, * And do me justice wronged, mine enemy, by thee ?

Their lord rejoiced, and emptying the cup gave the girls to drink. Then filling another he signed to the yellow girl and said to her, "O sun of the day, let us hear some nice verses." So she took the lute and preluding after the goodliest fashion, sang these couplets :—

I have a lover, and when drawing him * He draws on me a sword blade glancing grim :

Allah avenge some little of his wrongs, * Who holds my heart yet wreaks o'erbearing whim :

Oft though I say, "Renounce him, heart !" yet heart * Will to none other turn excepting him.

He is my wish and will of all men, but * Fate's envious hand to me's aye grudging him.

The master rejoiced and drank and gave the girls to drink ; then he filled the cup, and taking it in hand signed to the black girl, saying, "O pupil of the eye, let us have a taste of thy quality, though it be but two words." So she took the lute and tuning it and tightening the strings, preluded in various modes, then returned to the first and sang to a lively air these couplets :—

Ho ye, mine eyes, let prodigal tears go free ; * This ecstasy would see my being unbe² :

All ecstasies I dree for sake of friend * I fuddle, mangre enviers' jealousy :

Censors forbid me from his rosy cheek, * Yet e'er inclines my heart to rosery :

Cups of pure wine, time was, went circuiting * In joy, what time the lute sang melody,

¹ i.e., martyrdom ; a Koranic term "fi sabilî 'llahî" = on the way of Allah.

² These rhymes in -y, -ee, and -ic are purposely affected, to imitate the cadence of the Arabic.

While kept his troth the friend who madded me * Yet made me rising star of bliss to see :

But—with Time turned he, not by sin of mine ; * Than such a turn can aught more bitter be ?

Upon his cheek there grows and glows a rose, * Nay two, whereof grant Allah one to me !

An were prostration¹ by our law allowed * To aught but Allah, at his feet I had bowed.

Thereupon rose the six girls and kissing ground before their lord, said to him, " Do thou justice between us, O our lord ! " So he looked at their beauty and loveliness and the contrast of their colours and praised Almighty Allah and glorified Him. Then said he, " There is none of you but hath learnt the Koran by heart, and mastered the musical art and is versed in the chronicles of yore and the doings of peoples which have gone before ; so it is my desire that each one of you rise and pointing finger at her opposite, praise herself and dispraise her co-concubine ; that is to say, let the blonde point to the brunette, the plump to the slender and the yellow to the black girl ; after which the rivals, each in her turn, shall do the like with the former ; and be this illustrated with citations from Holy Writ and somewhat of anecdotes and verse, so as to show forth your fine breeding and elegance of your pleading." And they answered him, " We hear and we obey ! " —And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the handmaids answered the man of Al-Yaman, " We hear and we obey ! " Accordingly the blonde rose first and, pointing at the black girl, said to her, " Out on thee, blackamoor ! It is told by tradition that whiteness saith :—I am the shining light, I am the rising moon of the fourteenth night. My hue is patent and my brow is resplendent, and of my beauty quoth the poet :—

White girl with softly rounded polished cheeks * As if a pearl concealed by Beauty's boon :

Her stature Alif-like² ; her smile like Mím³ * And o'er her eyes two brows that bend like Nún.⁴

¹ Arab. Sujūd, the ceremonial prostration, touching the ground with the forehead. So in the Old Testament " he bowed (or fell down) and worshipped " (Gen. xxiv. 26 ; Mat. ii. 11), of which our translation gives a wrong idea.

² Thus written ! hence as has been seen, a girl is called Alfiyyah =
A-shaped.

³ i.e. the medial form of m = m.

⁴ i.e. the inverted n, n.

'Tis as her glance were arrow, and her brows * Bows ever bent to shoot Death-dart oftsoon:
 If cheek and shape thou view, there shalt thou find * Rose, myrtle, basil and Narcissus wone.
 Men wont in gardens plant and set the branch; * How many garths thy stature branch doth own!

So my colour is like the hale and healthy day and the newly-culled orange-spray, and the star of sparkling ray¹; and indeed quoth Almighty Allah, in His precious Book to His prophet Moses (on whom be the Peace!):—Put thy hand into thy bosom; it shall come forth white, without hurt.² And again he saith:—But they whose faces shall become white, shall be in the mercy of Allah; therein shall they remain for ever.³ My colour is a sign, a miracle, and my loveliness supreme, and my beauty a term extreme. It is on the like of me that raiment showeth fair and fine, and to the like of me that hearts incline. Moreover, in whiteness are many excellences; for instance, the snow falleth white from heaven, and it is traditional that the beautifullest of colours is white. The Moslems also glory in white turbands, but I should be tedious were I to tell all that may be told in praise of white; little and enough is better than too much of unfilling stuff. So now I will begin with thy dispraise, O black, O colour of ink and blacksmith's dust, thou whose face is like the raven which bringeth about the parting of lovers. Verily, the poet saith in praise of white and blame of black:—

Seest not that pearls are prized for milky hue, * But with a dirham buy we coals in load?
 And while white faces enter Paradise, * Black faces crowd Gehenna's black abode.

And indeed it is told in certain histories, related on the authority of devout men, that Noah (on whom be peace!) was sleeping one day, with his sons Cham and Shem seated at his head, when a wind sprang up and lifting his clothes, uncovered his nakedness; whereat Cham looked and laughed and did not cover him: but Shem arose and covered him. Presently, their sire awoke and learning what had been done by his sons, blessed Shem and cursed Cham. So Shem's face was whitened and from him sprang the prophets and the orthodox Caliphs and Kings; whilst Cham's face was blackened and he fled forth to the land of Abyssinia, and of his lineage came the blacks.¹ All people are of one mind in affirming the lack of understanding of the blacks, even as saith the adage, "How shall one find a black with a mind?" Quoth her master, "Sit thee down, thou hast given us sufficient and even excess." Thereupon he signed to the negress who rose and pointing her finger at the blonde, said:—"Dost thou not know that in the Koran sent down to His prophet and apostle is transmitted the saying of God the Most High, 'By the night when it covereth all things with darkness; by the day when it shineth forth'²! If the night were not the more illustrious, verily Allah had not sworn by it nor had given it precedence of the day. And indeed all men of wit and wisdom accept this. Knowest thou not that black is the ornament of youth, and that, when hoariness descendeth upon the head, delights pass away and the hour of death draweth in sight? Were not black the most illustrious of things, Allah had not set it in the core of the heart³ and the pupil of the eye; and how excellent is the saying of the poet:—

¹ It may also mean a "Séigné of pearls."

² Koran, xxvii. 12. This was one of the nine "signs" to wicked "Pharaoh." The "hand of Moses" is a symbol of power and ability (Koran, vii. 105). The whiteness was supernatural beauty, not leprosy of the Jews (Exod. iv. 6); but brilliancy, after being born red or black; according to some commentators, Moses was a negro.

³ Koran, iii. 103; the other faces become black. This explains, I have noticed, the use of the phrases in blessing and cursing.

I love not black girls but because they show * Youth's colour, tinct of eye and heartcore's hue:

Nor are in error who unlove the white, * And hoary hairs and winding-sheet eschew.

And that said of another:—

Black⁴ girls, not white, are they * All worthy love I see:

Black girls wear dark-brown lips⁵; * Whites, blotch of leprosy.

¹ Here we have the naked legend of the negro's origin; one of those nursery tales in which the ignorant of Christendom still believe. But the deduction from the fable and the testimony to the negro's lack of intelligence, though unpleasant to our ignorant negrophils, are factual and satisfactory.

² Koran, xcii. 1, 2: an oath of Allah to reward and punish with Heaven and Hell.

³ Alluding to the "black drop" in the heart: it was taken from Mohammed's by the Archangel Gabriel. The fable seems to have arisen from the verse, "Have we not opened thy breast?" (Koran, chapt. xciv. 1.) The popular tale is that Halimah, the Badawi nurse of Mohammed, of the Banu Sa'ad tribe, once saw her son, also a child, running towards her and asked him what was the matter. He answered, "My little brother was seized by two men in white, who stretched him on the ground and opened his belly!" For a full account and deductions see the Rev. Mr. Badger's article, "Muhammed" (p. 959) in vol. iii, "Dictionary of Christian Biography."

⁴ Arab. "Sumr," lit. brown (as it is afterwards used), but politely applied to a negro: "Yá Abu Sumrah!" O father of brownness.

⁵ Arab. "Lumá" = dark hue of the inner lips admired by the Arabs and to us suggesting most unpleasant ideas. Mr. Chenery renders it "dark red" and "ruddy," altogether missing the idea.

And of a third :—

Black girls in acts are white, and 'tis as though * Like eyes, with purest shine and sheen they show ;

If I go daft for her, be not amazed ; * Black bile¹ drives melancholic mad we know :

'Tis as my colour were the noon of night ; * For all no moon it be, its splendours glow.

Moreover, is the forgathering of lovers good but in the night ? Let this quality and profit suffice thee. What protecteth lovers from spies and censors like the blackness of night's darkness ; and what causeth to them to fear discovery like the whiteness of the dawn's brightness ? So, how many claims to honour are there not in blackness and how excellent is the saying of the poet ?—

I visit them, and night-black lendeth aid to me * Seconding love, but dawn-white is mine enemy.

And that of another :—

How many a night I've passed with the beloved of me, * While gloom with dusky tresses veiled our desires :

But when the morn-light showed it caused me sad affright ; and I to Morning said, " Who worship light are liars ² ! "

And saith a third :—

He came to see me, hiding neath the skirt of night, * Hasting his steps as wended he in cautions plight.

I rose and spread my cheek upon his path like rug, * Abject, and trailed my skirt to hide it from his sight ;

But rose the crescent moon and strave its best to show * The world our loves, like nail-sleece raying radiant light ³ :

Then what befell befell : I need not aught describe ; * But think thy best, and ask me naught of wrong or right.

Meet not thy lover save at night for fear of slander * The Sun's a tittle-tattler and the Moon's a pander.

And a fifth :—

I love not white girls blown with fat who puff and pant ; * The maid for me is young brunette cignonpoint-scant.

I'd rather ride a colt that's dark upon the day * Of race, and set my friends upon the elephant.

¹ Arab. "Saudá," feminine of "Aswad" (black), and meaning black bile (melancholia) as opposed to leucocholia.

² i.e., the Magians, Sabians, Zoroastrians.

³ The "Unguinum fulgor" of the Latins, who did not forget to celebrate the shining of the nails although they did not Henna them like Easterns. Some, however, have suggested that Ῥοδοδάκτυλος alludes to colouring matter.

And a sixth :—

My lover came to me one night, * And clipt we both with fond embrace;
And lay together till we saw * The morning come with swiftest pace.
Now I pray Allah and my Lord * To reunite us of His grace;
And make night last me long as he * Lies in the arms that tightly lace.

Were I to set forth all the praises of blackness, my tale would be tedious; but little and enough is better than too much of unfilling stuff. As for thee, O blonde, thy colour is that of leprosy and thine embrace is suffocation¹; and it is of report that hoar-frost and icy cold² are in Gehenna for the torment of the wicked. Again, of things black and excellent is ink, wherewith is written Allah's word; and were it not for black ambergris and black musk, there would be no perfumes to carry to Kings. How many glories I may not mention dwell in blackness, and how well saith the poet :—

Seest not that musk, the nut-brown musk, e'er claims the highest price, * Whilst for a load of whitest lime none more than dirham bids?

And while white speck upon the eye deforms the loveliest youth, *
Black eyes discharge the sharpest shafts in lashes from their lids."

Quoth her master, "Sit thee down: this much sufficeth." So she sat down and he signed to the fat girl, who rose—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirtysixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the man of Al-Yaman, the master of the handmaids, signed to the fat girl who rose and, pointing her finger at the slim girl, bared her calves and wrists and uncovered her stomach, showing its dimples and the plump rondure of her navel. Then she donned a shift of fine stuff that exposed her whole body, and said:—Praised be Allah who created me, for that He beautified my face and made me fat and fair of the fattest and fairest; and likened me to branches laden with fruit, and bestowed upon me abounding beauty and brightness: and praised be He no less,

1 Women with white skin are supposed to be heating and unwholesome

2 Moslems have a cold as well as a hot Hell, the former called Zamhair (lit. "intense cold") or Al-Barahût, after a well in Hazramaut; as Gehenna (Arab. Jahannam) from the furnace-like ravine East of Jerusalem (vol. iii. night cccxxv.).

for that He hath given me the precedence and honoured me, when He mentioneth me in His Holy Book! Quoth the Most High, 'And he brought a fatted calf.'¹ And He hath made me like unto a vergier full of peaches and pomegranates. In very sooth even as the townsfolk long for fat birds and eat of them and love not lean birds, so do the sons of Adam desire fat meat and eat of it. How many vauntful attributes are there not in fatness, and how well saith the poet:—

Farewell thy love, for see, the *Cafilah's*² on the move: * O man, canst bear to say adieu and leave thy love?

'Tis as her going were to seek her neighbour's tent, * The gait of fat fair maid, whom hearts shall all approve.

Sawest thou ever one stand before a flesher's stall but sought of him fat flesh³? As for thee, O thin one, thy calves are like the shanks of sparrows or the pokers of furnaces; and thou art a cruciform plank or a piece of flesh poor and rank; there is naught in thee to gladden the heart; even as saith the poet:—

With Allah take I refuge from whatever driveth me * To bed with one like foot-rasp⁴ or the roughest ropery:

In every limb she hath a horn that butteth me whene'er * I fain would rest, so morn and eve I wend me wearily."

Quoth her master, "Sit thee down: this much sufficeth." So she sat down and he signed to the slender girl, who rose, as she were a willow-wand, or a rattan-frond or a stalk of sweet basil, and said:—"Praised be Allah who created me and beautified me and made my embraces the end of all desire, and likened me to the branch whereto all hearts incline. If I rise, I rise lightly; if I sit, I sit prettily; I am nimble-witted at a jest and merrier-souled than mirth itself. Never heard I one describe his mistress, saying, "My beloved is the bigness of an elephant or like a mountain long and broad"; but rather, "My lady hath a slender

¹ Koran, ii. 26; speaking of Abraham when he entertained the angels unawares

² Arab. "Rakb," usually applied to a fast-going caravan of dromedary riders (Pilgrimage, ii. 329). The "Cafilah" is Arab.: "Caravan" is a corruption of the Pers. Karwán.

³ It is interesting to contrast this dispute between fat and thin with the Shakespearean humour of Falstaff and Prince Henry.

⁴ Arab. "Dalak" vulg. Hajar al-Hammam (Hammam-stone). The comparison is very apt: the rasps are of baked clay artificially roughened (see illustrations in Lane, M. E. chapt. xvi). The rope is called "Masad," (Koranic), a bristling line of palm-fibre like the coir now familiarly known in England.

waist and a slim shape.¹” Furthermore, a little food filleth me and a little water quencheth my thirst; my sport is agile and my habit active; for I am sprightlier than the sparrow and lighter-skipping than the starling. My favours are the longing of the lover and the delight of the desirer; for I am goodly of shape, sweet of smile, and graceful as the bending willow-wand or the rattan-cane,² or the stalk of the basil-plant; nor is there any can compare with me in loveliness, even as saith one of me:—

Thy shape with willow branch I dare compare, • And hold thy figure as my fortunes fair:

I wake each morn distraught, and follow thee, • And from the rival' eye in fear I fare.

It is for the like of me that amourists run mad and that those who desire me wax distracted. If my lover would draw me to him, I am drawn to him; and if he would have me incline to him, I incline to him and not against him. But now, as for thee, O fat of body, thine eating is the feeding of an elephant, and neither much nor little filleth thee. When thou liest with a man who is lean, he hath no ease of thee; nor can he anyways take his pleasure of thee. What goodness is there in thy grossness, and what courtesy or pleasantness in thy coarseness? Fat flesh is fit for naught but the flesher, nor is there one point therein that pleadeth for praise. If one joke with thee, thou art angry; if one sport with thee, thou art sulky; if thou sleep, thou snoorest; if thou walk, thou lollest out thy tongue; if thou eat, thou art never filled. Thou art heavier than mountains and fouler than corruption and crime. Thou hast in thee nor agility nor benedicite, nor thinkest thou of aught save meat and sleep. In short, there is no good thing about thee, and indeed the poet saith of thee:—

Heavy and swollen like an urine-bladder blown, • With hips and thighs like mountain propping piles of stone;

Whene'er she walks in Western hemisphere, her tread • Makes the far Eastern world with weight to moan and groan.”

Quoth her master, “Sit thee down, this sufficeth”; so she sat down and he signed to the yellow girl, who rose to her feet and

¹ Although the Arab's ideal of beauty, as has been seen and said, corresponds with ours, the Egyptians (Modern) the Maroccans and other negroed races like “walking tun-butts” as Clapperton called his amorous widow.

² Arab “Khayzar” or “Khayzarán” the rattan-palm. Those who have seen this most graceful “palmijuncus” in its native forest will recognise the neatness of the simile.

praised Allah Almighty and magnified His name, calling down peace and blessing on Mohammed the best of His creatures; after which she pointed her finger at the brunette and said to her;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-seventh Night,

She continued, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the yellow girl stood up and praised Almighty Allah and magnified His name; after which she pointed her finger at the brown girl and said to her:—I am the one praised in the Koran, and the Compassionate hath described my complexion and its excellence over all other hues in His manifest Book, where Allah saith, "A yellow, pure yellow, whose colour gladdeneth the beholders."¹ Wherefore my colour is a sign and portent, and my grace is supreme and my beauty a term extreme; for that my tint is the tint of a ducat and the colour of the planets and moons and the hue of ripe apples. My fashion is the fashion of the fair, and the dye of saffron outvieth all other dyes; so my semblance is wondrous and my colour marvellous. I am soft of body and high of price, comprising all qualities of beauty. My colour is essentially precious as virgin gold, and how many boasts and glories doth it not unfold! Of the like of me quoth the poet:—

Her golden yellow is the sheeny sun's; * And like gold sequins she delights the sight:

Saffron small portion of her glance can show; * Nay,² she outvies the moon when brightest bright.

And I shall at once begin in thy dispraise, O berry-brown girl! Thy tincture is that of the buffalo, and all souls shudder at thy sight. If thy colour be in any created thing, it is blamed; if it be in food, it is poisoned; for thy hue is the hue of the dung-fly; it is a mark of ugliness even in dogs; and among the colours it is one which strikes with amazement and is of the signs of mourning. Never heard I of brown gold or brown pearls or brown gems. If thou enter the privy, thy colour changeth, and when thou comest out thou addest ugliness to ugliness. Thou art a non-descript; neither black that thou mayst be recognised, nor white that thou

¹ Koran, ii. 64: referring to the heifer which the Jews were ordered to sacrifice.

² Arab. "kallá," a Koranic term possibly from Kull (all) and lá (not)=probus non—altogether not!

mayst be described; and in thee there is no good quality, even as saith the poet :—

The hue of dusty motes is hers; that dull brown hue of hers * Is mouldy, like the dust and mud by Cossid's foot upthrown¹;
I never look upon her brow, e'en for eye-twinkling space, * But in brown study fall I and my thoughts take browner tone."

Quoth her master, "Sit thee down; this much sufficeth"; so she sat down and he signed to the brunette. Now she was a model of beauty and loveliness and symmetry and perfect grace; soft of skin, slim of shape, of stature rare, and coal-black hair; with cheeks rosy-pink, eyes black-rimmed by nature's hand, face fair, and eloquent tongue; moreover, slender-waisted and heavy-hipped. So she rose and said:—"Praise be to Allah who hath created me neither leper-white nor bile-yellow nor charcoal-black, but hath made my colour to be beloved of men of wit and wisdom; for all the poets extol berry-brown maids in every tongue, and exalt their colour over all other colours. To 'brown of hue (they say) praise is due'; and Allah bless him who singeth :—

And in brunettes is mystery, could'st thou but read it right, * Thy sight would never dwell on others, be they red or white:

Free-flowing conversation, amorous coquettishness * Would teach Hárut himself a mightier spell of magic might.

And saith another :—

Give me brunettes, so limber, lissom, lithe of sway, * Brunettes tall, slender, straight like Samhar's nut-brown lance;²

Languid of eyelids and with silky down on either cheek, * Who fixed in lover's heart work to his life mischance.

And yet another :—

Now, by my life, brown hue hath point of comeliness * Leaves whiteness nowhere and high o'er the Moon takes place;

But an of whiteness aught it borrowed self to deck. * 'Twould change its graces and would pale for its disgrace :

Not with his must³ I'm drunken, but his locks of musk * Are wine inebriating all of human race.

¹ "Habāb" or "Habā," the fine particles of dust, which we call motes. The Cossid (Arab. Kásid) is the Anglo-Indian term for a running courier (mostly under Government), the Persian "Shátir" and the Guebre Rávand.

² Arab. "Samhari," a very long thin lance so called after Samhar, the maker, or the place of making. See vol. i. night xxxiv. It is supposed to cast, when planted in the ground, a longer shadow, in proportion to its height, than any other thing of the kind.

³ Arab. "Suláfah"; properly flisane which flows from the grapes before pressure. The plur. "Sawálif" also means tresses of hair and past events thus there is "a triple entendre." And again "he" is used for "she."

His charms are jealous each of each, and all desire * To be the down that creepeth up his lovely face.

And again another :—

Why not incline me to that show of silky down, * On cheeks of dark brunette, like bamboo spiring brown ?

Whenas high rank in beauty poets sing, they say * Brown ant-like speeklet worn by nenuphar in crown.

And see I sundry lovers tear out other's eyne * For the brown mole beneath that jetty pupil shown,

Then why do censors blame me for one all a mole ? * Allah I pray demolish each molesting clown ¹!

My form is all grace and my shape is built on heavy base ; Kings desire my colour which all adore, rich and poor. I am pleasant, active, handsome, elegant, soft of skin, and prized for price ; eke I am perfect in seemlihead and breeding and eloquence ; my aspect is comely and my tongue witty ; my temper is bright and my play a pretty sight. As for thee, thou art like unto a mallow growing about the Lúk Gate ² ; in hue fallow and streaked-yellow and made all of sulphur. Aroynt thee, O copper-worth of jaundiced sorrel, O rust of brass-pot, O face of owl in gloom, and fruit of the Hell-tree Zakkúm ³ ; whose bedfellow, for heart-break, is buried in the tomb. And there is no good thing in thee, even as saith the poet of the like of thee :—

Yellowness, tincturing her tho' nowise sick or sorry, * Straitens my hapless heart and makes my head sore ache ;

An thou repent not, Soul ! I'll punish thee with kissing ⁴ * Her fallow face that shall mine every grinder break ! "

And when she ended her lines, quoth her master, " Sit thee down, this much sufficeth ! "—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

1 There is a pun in the last line, " Khálun " (a mole) " khallauni " (rid me), etc.

2 Of old Fustát, afterwards part of Southern Cairo, a proverbially miserable quarter, hence the saying, " They quoted Misr to Káhirah (Cairo), whereon Bab al-Luk rose with its grass," in derision of nobodies who push themselves forward. Burckhardt, Prov. 276

3 Its fruits are the heads of devils ; a true Dantesque fancy. Koran, chapt. xvii 62, " the tree cursed in the Koran," and in chapt xxxvii 60, " is this better entertainment, or the tree of Al-Zakkúm ? " Commentators say that it is a thorn bearing a bitter almond which grows in the Tehamah and was therefore promoted to Hell.

4 Arab " Laqm " (lathm) as opposed to Bausah or boseh (a buss) and Kublah (a kiss, generic).

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the yellow girl ended her recitation, quoth her master, "Sit thee down, this much sufficeth!" Then he made peace between them and clad them all in sumptuous robes of honour and hanelled them with precious jewels of land and sea. And never have I seen, O Commander of the Faithful, any when or any where, aught fairer than these six damsels fair. Now when Al-Maamun heard this story from Mohammed of Bassorah, he turned to him and said, "O Mohammed, knowest thou the abiding-place of these damsels and their master, and canst thou contrive to buy them of him for us?" He answered, "O Commander of the Faithful, indeed I have heard that their lord is wrapped up in them and cannot bear to be parted from them." Rejoined the Caliph, "Take thee ten thousand gold pieces for each girl, that is sixty thousand for the whole purchase; and carry the coin to his house and buy them of him." So Mohammed of Bassorah took the money and betaking himself to the Man of Al-Yaman, acquainted him with the wish of the Prince of True Believers. He consented to part with them at that price to pleasure the Caliph; and despatched them to Al-Maamun, who assigned them an elegant abode and therein used to sit with them as cup-companions; marvelling at their beauty and loveliness, at their varied colours and at the excellence of their conversation. Thus matters stood for many a day; but, after awhile, when their former owner could no longer bear to be parted from them, he sent a letter to the Commander of the Faithful complaining to him of his own ardent love-longing for them, and containing, amongst other contents, these couplets:—

Captured me six, all bright with youthful blee: • Then on all six be best salams from me!

They are my hearing, seeing, very life; • My meat, my drink, my joy, my jollity:

I'll ne'er forget the favours erst so charmed • Whose loss hath turned my sleep to insomny:

Alack, O longsome pining and O tears! • Would I had farewelled all humanity:

Those eyes, with bowed and well-arched eyebrows¹ dight, • Like bows have struck me with their archery.

¹ Arab. "Jufún" (plur. of jafn) which may mean eyebrows or eyelashes and only the context can determine which.

Now when the letter came to the hands of Al-Maamun, he robed the six damsels in rich raiment, and giving them threescore thousand dinars sent them back to their lord, who joyed in them with exceeding joy¹ (more especially for the moneys they brought him) and abode with them in all the comfort and pleasance of life, till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Severer of societies. And men also recount the tale of

HARUN AL-RASHID AND THE DAMSEL AND ABU NOWAS.

THE Caliph, Commander of the Faithful, Harun al-Rashid, being one night exceedingly restless and thoughtful with sad thought, rose from his couch and walked about the by-ways of his palace, till he came to a chamber, over whose doorway hung a curtain. He raised that curtain, and saw at the upper end of the room a bedstead whereon lay something black, as it were a man asleep, with a wax taper on his right hand and another on his left; and as the Caliph stood wondering at the sight, behold, he remarked a flagon full of old wine whose mouth was covered by the cup. The Caliph wondered even more at this, saying, "How came this black by such wine-service?" Then, drawing near the bedstead, he found that it was a girl lying asleep there, curtained by her hair; so he uncovered her face and saw that it was like the moon, on the night of his fulness.² Then the Caliph filled himself a cup of wine and drank it to the roses of her cheeks; and, feeling inclined to enjoy her, kissed a mole on her face, whereupon she started up from sleep, and cried out, "O Trusted of Allah,³ what may this be?" Replied he, "A guest who

¹ Very characteristic of Egyptian manners is the man who loves six girls equally well, who lends them, as it were, to the Caliph; and who takes back the goods as if in no wise damaged by the loan.

² The moon is masculine, possibly by connection with the Assyrian Lune-god "Sin"; but I can find no cause for the Sun (Shams) being feminine.

³ Arab. "Al-Amin," a title of the Prophet. It is usually held that this proud name, "The honest man," was applied by his fellow-citizens to Mohammed in early life; and that in his twenty-fifth year, when the eighth Ka'abah was being built, it induced the tribes to make him their umpire concerning the distinction of placing in position the "Black Stone" which Gabriel had brought from Heaven to be set up as the starting-post for the seven circuitings. He distributed the honour amongst the clans, and thus gave universal satisfaction. His Christian biographers mostly omit to record an anecdote which speaks so highly in Mohammed's favour (Pilgrimage, iii. 192).

knocketh at thy door, hoping that thou wilt give him hospitality till the dawn"; and she answered, "Even so! I will serve him with my hearing and my sight." So she brought forward the wine and they drank together, after which she took the lute, and tuning the strings preluded in one-and-twenty modes, then returning to the first played a lively measure and sang these couplets:—

The tongue of love from heart bespeaks my sprite, • Telling I love thee with love infinite:
I have an eye bears witness to my pain, • And fluttering heart sore hurt by parting-flight.
I cannot hide the love that harms my life; • Tears ever roll and growth of pine I sight:
I knew not what love was ere loving thee; • But Allah's destiny to all is dight.

And when her verses were ended she said, "O Commander of the Faithful, I have been wronged!"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the damsel cried, "O Commander of the Faithful, I have been wronged!" Quoth he, "How so, and who hath wronged thee?" Quoth she, "Thy son bought me awhile ago, for ten thousand dirhams, meaning to give me to thee; but thy wife, the daughter of thine uncle, sent him the said price and bade him shut me up from thee in this chamber." Whereupon said the Caliph, "Ask a boon of me," and she, "I ask thee to lie with me to-morrow night." Replied the Caliph, "Inshallah!" and leaving her, went away. Now as soon as it was morning, he repaired to his sitting-room and called for Abu Nowás, but found him not and sent his chamberlain to ask after him. The chamberlain found him in a tavern, pawned and pledged for a score of a thousand dirhams, which he had spent on a certain beardless youth, and questioned him of his case. So he told him what had betided him with the comely boy and how he had spent upon him a thousand silver pieces; whereupon quoth the chamberlain, "Show him to me; and if he be worth this, thou art excused." He answered, "Patience, and thou shalt see him presently." As they were talking together, up came the lad, clad in a white tunic, under which was another of red and under this yet another black. Now when Abu Nowas saw him, he sighed a loud sigh and improvised these couplets:—

He showed himself in shirt of white, * With eyes and eyelids languor-dight.

Quoth I, "Dost pass and greet me not? * Though were thy greeting a delight!

Blest He who clothed in rose thy cheeks, * Creates what wills He by His might!"

Quoth he, "Leave prate, for ur my Lord * Of works is wondrous infinite:

My garment's like my face and luck; * All three are white on white on white."

When the beardless one heard these words, he doffed the white tunic and appeared in the red; and when Abu Nowas saw him he redoubled in expressions of admiration and repeated these couplets:—

He showed in garb anemone-red, * A focman "friend" entituled:

Quoth I in marvel, "Thou'rt full moon" * Whose weed shames rose however red:

Hath thy cheek stained it red, or hast * Dyed it in blood by lovers bled?"

Quoth he, "Sol gave me this for shirt * When hasting down the West to bed:

So garb and wine and hue of cheek * All three are red on red on red."

And when the verses came to an end, the beardless one doffed the red tunic and stood in the black; and when Abu Nowas saw him he redoubled in attention to him and versified in these couplets:—

He came in sable huèd sacque * And shone in dark men's heart to rack:

Quoth I, "Dost pass and greet me not? * Joying the hateful envious pack?

Thy garment's like thy locks and like * My lot, three blacks on black on black."

Seeing this state of things and understanding the case of Abu Nowas and his love-longing, the Chamberlain returned to the Caliph and acquainted him therewith; so he bade him pouch a thousand dirhams and go and take him out of pawn. Thereupon the Chamberlain returned to Abu Nowas and paying his score, carried him to the Caliph, who said, "Make me some verses containing the words, O Trusted of Allah, what may this be?" Answered he, "I hear and I obey, O Commander of the Faithful."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fortieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Abu Nowas answered, "I hear and I obey, O Commander of the Faithful!" and forthwith he improvised these couplets:—

Long was my night for sleepless misery; • Weary of body and of thought ne'er free:

I rose and in my palace walked awhile, • Then wandered thro' the halls of Haremry:

Till chanced I on a blackness, which I found • A white girl hid in hair for napery:

Here to her for a moon of brightest sheen! • Like willow-wand and veiled in pudency:

I quaffed a cup to her; then drew I near, • And kissed the beauty-spot on cheek had she:

She woke a-start, and in her sleep's amaze, • Swayed as the swaying branch in rain we see;

Then rose and said to me, "O Trusted One • Of Allah, O Amin, what may this be?"

Quoth I, "A guest that cometh to thy tents • And craves till morn thy hospitality."

She answered, "Gladly I, my lord, will grace • And honour such a guest with ear and eye."

Cried the Caliph, "Allah strike thee dead! it is as if thou hadst been present with us.¹" Then he took him by the hand and carried him to the damsel and when Abu Nowas saw her clad in a dress and veil of blue, he expressed abundant admiration and improvised these couplets:—

Say to the pretty one in veil of blue, • "By Allah, O my life, have ruth on dole!

For, when the fair entreats her lover foul, • Sighs rend his bosom and bespeak his soul:

By charms of thee and whitest cheek I swear thee, • Pity a heart for love lost all control:

Bend to him, be his stay 'gainst stress of love, • Nor aught accept what saith the ribald fool."

Now when he ended his verse, the damsel set wine before the Caliph; and, taking the lute, played a lively measure and sang these couplets:—

¹ The idea is that Abu Nowas was a thought-reader—such being the prerogative of inspired poets in the East. His drunkenness and debauchery only added to his power. I have already noticed that "Allah strike thee dead" (Kâtîla-k Allah) is like our phrase, "Confound the fellow, how clever he is."

Wilt thou be just to others in thy love, and do * Unright, and put me off, and take new friend in lieu ?

Had lovers Kazi unto whom I might complain * Of thee, he'd peradventure grant the due I sue :

If thou forbid me pass your door, yet I afar * Will stand, and viewing you wait my salams to you !

The Caliph bade her ply Abu Nowas with wine till he lost his right senses ; thereupon he gave him a full cup, and he drank a draught of it and held the cup in his hand till he slept. Then the Commander of the Faithful bade the girl take the cup from his grasp and hide it ; so she took it and set it between her thighs ; moreover he drew his scymitar and standing at the head of Abu Nowas, pricked him with the point ; whereupon he awoke and saw the drawn sword and the Caliph standing over him. At this sight the fumes of the wine fled from his head and the Caliph said to him, " Make me some verses and tell me therein what is become of thy cup ; or I will cut off thy head." So he improvised these couplets :—

My tale, indeed, is tale unlief ; * 'Twas yonder fawn who played the thief !

She stole my cup of wine before * The sips and sups had dealt relief ;
And hid it in a certain place, * My heart's desire and longing grief.
I name it not, for dread of him * Who hath of it command-in-chief.

Quoth the Caliph, " Allah strike thee dead¹ ! How knewest thou that ? But we accept what thou sayst." Then he ordered him a dress of honour and a thousand dinars, and he went away rejoicing. And among tales they tell is one of

THE MAN WHO STOLE THE DISH OF GOLD WHEREIN THE DOG ATE.

SOME time whilome there was a man, who had accumulated debts, and his case was straitened upon him, so that he left his people and family and went forth in distraction ; and he ceased not wandering on at random till he came after a time to a city tall of walls and firm of foundations. He entered it in a state of despondency and despair, harried by hunger and worn with the weariness of his way. As he passed through one of the main streets, he saw a company of the great going along ; so he followed them till they reached a house like to a royal palace. He entered with them, and they stayed not faring forwards till they came in presence of a person seated at the upper end of a saloon, a man of the most dignified and majestic aspect, surrounded by pages and eunuchs, as he were of the sons of the Wazirs. When he saw the visitors, he rose to greet them and received them with honour; but the poor man aforesaid was confounded at his own boldness, when beholding—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Again said facetiously, " Devil take you ! "

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the poor man aforesaid was confounded at his own boldness, when beholding the goodness of the place and the crowd of servants and attendants; so drawing back, in perplexity and fear for his life sat down apart in a place afar off, where none should see him. Now it chanced that whilst he was sitting, behold, in came a man with four sporting-dogs, whereon were various kinds of raw silk and brocade¹ and wearing round their necks collars of gold with chains of silver, and tied up each dog in a place set privy for him; after which he went out and presently returned with four dishes of gold, full of rich meats, which he set severally before the dogs, one for each. Then he went away and left them, whilst the poor man began to eye the food, for stress of hunger, and longed to go up to one of the dogs and eat with him; but fear of them withheld him. Presently, one of the dogs looked at him, and Allah Almighty inspired the dog with a knowledge of his case, so he drew back from the platter and signed to the man, who came and ate till he was filled. Then he would have withdrawn, but the dog again signed to him to take for himself the dish and what food was left in it, and pushed it towards him with his fore-paw. So the man took the dish and leaving the house, went his way, and none followed him. Then he journeyed to another city where he sold the dish and buying with the price a stock-in-trade, returned to his own town. There he sold his goods and paid his debts; and he throve and became affluent and rose to perfect prosperity. He abode in his own land; but after some years had passed he said to himself, "Needs must I repair to the city of the owner of the dish, and carry him a fit and handsome present and pay him the money-value of that which his dog bestowed upon me." So he took the price of the dish and a suitable gift; and, setting out, journeyed day and night till he came to that city; he entered it and sought the place where the man lived: but he found there naught save ruins mouldering in row and croak of crow, and house and home desolate, and all conditions in changed state. At this his heart and soul were troubled, and he repeated the saying of him who saith:—

¹ In all hot-damp countries it is necessary to clothe dogs, morning and evening especially, otherwise they soon die of rheumatism and loin-disease.

Void are the private rooms of treasury: * As void were hearts of fear and piety:

Changed is the Wady nor are its gazelles * Those fawns, nor sand-hills those I wont to see.

And that of another:—

In sleep came Su'adâ's¹ shade and wakened me * Near dawn, when comrades all a-sleeping lay:

But waking found I that the shade was fled, * And saw air empty and shrine far away.

Now when the man saw these mouldering ruins and witnessed what the hand of time had manifestly done with the place, leaving but traces of the substantial things that erewhiles had been, a little reflection made it needless for him to enquire of the case; so he turned away. Presently, seeing a wretched man, in a plight which made him shudder and feel goose-skin, and which would have moved the very rock to ruth, he said to him, "Ho, thou! What have time and fortune done with the lord of this place? Where are his lovely faces, his shining full moons and splendid stars; and what is the cause of the ruin that is come upon his abode, so that nothing save the walls thereof remain?" Quoth the other, "He is the miserable thou seest mourning that which hath left him naked. But knowest thou not the words of the Apostle (whom Allah bless and keep!), wherein is a lesson to him who will learn by it and a warning to whoso will be warned thereby and guided in the right way, 'Verily it is the way of Allah Almighty to raise up nothing of this world, except He cast it down again?' If thou question of the cause of this accident, indeed it is no wonder, considering the chances and and slept there till a third part of the night was past, when I awoke and found my saddle-bags sliced open and a purse of a thousand gold pieces stolen from them." No sooner had he done speaking than the Chief summoned his chief officials and bade them lay hands on all in the khan and clap them in limbo till the morning; and on the morrow, he caused bring the rods and whips used in punishment; and, sending for the prisoners, was about to flog them till they confessed in the presence of the owner of the stolen money when, lo! a man broke through the crowd till he came up to the Chief of Police—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ = Beatrice. A fragment of these lines is in night cccxv. See also night dclclxxxi.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Chief was about to flog them, when lo! a man broke through the crowd till he came up to the Chief of Police and the trooper and said, "Ho! Emir, let these folk go, for they are wrongously accused, It was I who robbed this trooper, and see, here is the purse I stole from his saddle-bags." So saying, he pulled out the purse from his sleeve and laid it before Husam al-Din, who said to the soldier, "Take thy money and pouch it; thou now hast no ground of complaint against the people of the khan." Thereupon these folk and all who were present fell to praising the thief and blessing him; but he said, "Ho! Emir, the skill is not in that I came to thee in person and brought thee the purse; the cleverness was in taking it a second time from this trooper." Asked the Chief, "And how didst thou do to take it, O sharper?" and the robber replied, "O Emir, I was standing in the Shroff's¹ bazar at Cairo, when I saw this soldier receive the gold in change and put it in yonder purse; so I followed him from by-street to by-street, but found no occasion of stealing it. Then he travelled from Cairo, and I followed him from town to town, plotting and planning by the way to rob him, but without avail, till he entered this city, and I dogged him to the khan. I took up my lodging beside him and watched him till he fell asleep and I heard him sleeping; when I went up to him softly, softly; and I slit open his saddle-bags with this knife, and took the purse in the way I am now taking it." So saying, he put out his hand and took the purse from before the Chief of Police and the trooper, both of whom, together with the folk, drew back watching him and thinking he would show them how he took the purse from the saddle-bags. But, behold! he suddenly broke into a run and threw himself into a pool of standing water¹ hard by. So the Chief of the Police shouted to his officers, "Stop thief!" and many made after him; but before they could doff their clothes and descend the steps, he had made off; and they sought for him, but found him not; for that the by-streets and lanes of Alexandria all communicate. So they came back without bringing the purse; and the Chief of Police said to the trooper, "Thou hast no demand upon the folk; for thou foundest him who robbed thee and receivedst back thy money, but didst not keep it." So the trooper went away, having lost his money, whilst the folk were delivered from his hands and those of the Chief of Police; and all this was of the favour of Almighty Allah. And they also tell the tale of

¹ Arab. "Sarráf" = a money-changer.

AL-MALIK AL-NASIR AND THE THREE CHIEFS OF POLICE.

ONCE upon a time Al-Malik al-Násir² sent for the Wális or Chiefs of Police of Cairo, Bulak, and Fostat³ and said to them, "I desire each of you to recount me the marvellousest thing that hath befallen him during his term of office."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth Al-Malik al-Nasir to the three Walis, "I desire each of you to recount me the marvellousest thing which hath befallen him

¹ Arab "Birkah," a common feature in the landscapes of Lower Egypt it is either a natural pool left by the overflow of the Nile, or, as in the text, a built-up tank, like the "Táláb," for which India is famous. Sundry of these Birkahs are or were in Cairo itself, and some are mentioned in The Nights.

² Lit. "The conquering King"; a dynastic title assumed by Saláh al-Dín (Saladin) and sundry of the Ayyúbi (Eyoubite) sovereigns of Egypt, whom I would call the "Soldans."

³ "Káhirah" (i.e. City of Mars—the Planet) is our Cairo: Bulak is the port-suburb on the Nile, till 1858 wholly disjoined from the city; and Fostat is the outlier popularly called Old Cairo. The latter term is generally translated "town of leathern tents"; but in Arabic "fustât" is an abode of Sha'ar=hair, such as horse-hair, in fact any hair but "Wabar"=soft hair, as the camel's. See Lane, Lex.

during his term of office." So they answered, "We hear and we obey." Then said the Chief of the Police of Cairo, "Know thou, O our lord the Sultan, the most wonderful thing that befell me, during my term of office, was on this wise": and he began

THE STORY OF THE CHIEF OF POLICE OF CAIRO.

THERE were in this city two men of good repute fit to bear witness¹ in matters of murder and wounds; but they were both secretly addicted to intrigues with low women and to wine-bibbing and to dissolute doings, nor could I succeed (do what I would) in bringing them to book; and I began to despair of success. So I charged the taverners and confectioners and fruiterers and candle-chandlers and the keepers of brothels and bawdy houses to acquaint me of these two good men whenever they should anywhere be engaged in drinking or other debauchery, or together or apart; and ordered that, if they both or if either of them bought at their shops aught for the purpose of wassail and carousal, the vendors should not conceal it from me. And they replied, "We hear and obey." Presently it chanced that one night, a man came to me and said, "O my master, know that the two just men, the two witnesses, are in such a street in such a house, engaged in abominable wickedness." So I disguised myself, I and my body-servant, and ceased not trudging till I came to the house and knocked at the door, whereupon a slave-girl came out and opened to me, saying, "Who art thou?" I entered without answering her and saw the two legal witnesses and the house-master sitting, and lewd women by their side and before them great plenty of wine. When they saw me, they rose to receive me, and made much of me, seating me in the place of honour and saying to me, "Welcome for an illustrious guest and well come for a pleasant cup-companion!" And on this wise they met me without showing a sign of alarm or trouble. Presently, the master of the house arose from amongst us and went out and returned after a while with three hundred dinars, when the men said to me, without the least fear, "Know, O our lord the Wali, it is in thy power to do even more than disgrace and punish us; but this will bring thee in return nothing but weariness: so we reckon thou wouldst do better to take this much money and protect us; for Almighty Allah is named the Protector and loveth those of His servants who protect their Moslem neighbours; and thou shalt have thy reward in this world and due recompense in the world to come." So I said to myself, "I will take the money and protect them this once; but, if ever again I have them in my power, I will take my wreak of them"; for, you see, the money had tempted me. Thereupon I took it and went away thinking that no one would know it; but, next day, on a sudden one of the Kazi's messengers came to me and said to me, "O Wali, be good enough to answer the summons of the Kazi who wanteth thee." So I arose and accompanied him, knowing not the meaning of all this; and when I came into the judge's presence, I saw the two witnesses and the master of the house, who had given me the money, sitting by his side. Thereupon this man rose and sued me for three hundred dinars, nor was it in my power to deny the debt; for he produced a written obligation and his two companions, the legal witnesses, testified against me that I owed the amount. Their evidence satisfied the Kazi, and he ordered me to pay the sum; nor did I leave the Court till they had of me the three hundred gold pieces. So I went away in the utmost wrath and shame, vowing mischief and vengeance against them and repenting that I had not punished them. Such, then, is the most remarkable event which befell me during my term of office. Thereupon rose the Chief of the Bulak police and said, "As for me, O our lord, the Sultan, the most marvellous thing that happened to me since I became Wali was as follows": and he began

¹ Arab "'Adl'"=just: a legal witness to whose character there is no tangible objection—a prime consideration in Moslem law. Here "'Adl'" is evidently used ironically for a hypocritical rascal.

THE STORY OF THE CHIEF OF THE BULAK POLICE.

I WAS once in debt to the full amount of three hundred thousand gold pieces¹; and being distressed thereby I sold all that was behind me and what was before me and all I hent in hand, but I could collect no more than an hundred thousand dinars—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Lane (ii. 503) considers three thousand dinars (the figure in the Bres. Edit.) "a more probable sum." Possibly: but, I repeat, exaggeration is one of the many characteristics of The Nights.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Wali of Bulak continued:—So I sold all that was behind and before me, but could collect no more than an hundred thousand dinars and remained in great perplexity. Now one night, as I sat at home in this state, behold, there came a knocking; so I said to one of my servants, "See who is at the door." He went out and returned, wan of face, changed in countenance and with his side-muscles a-quivering; so I asked him, "What aileth thee?" and he answered, "There is a man at the door; he is half naked, clad in skins, with sword in hand and knife in girdle, and with him are a company of the same fashion and he asketh for thee." So I took my sword and going out to see who these were, behold, I found them as the boy had reported, and said to them, "What is your business?" They replied, "Of a truth we be thieves and have done fine work this night; so we appointed the swag to thy use, that thou mayst pay therein the debts which sadden thee and deliver thee from thy distress." Quoth I, "Where is the plunder?" and they brought me a great chest, full of vessels of gold and silver; which when I saw, I rejoiced and said to myself, "Here with I will settle all claims upon me and there will remain as much again." So I took the money and going inside said in my mind, "It were ignoble to let them fare away empty handed." Whereupon I brought out the hundred thousand dinars I had by me and gave it to them, thanking them for their kindness; and they pouched the moneys and went their way, under cover of the night so that none might know of them. But when morning dawned I examined the contents of the chest, and found them copper and tin¹ washed with gold worth five hundred dirhams at the most; and this was grievous to me, for I had lost what moneys I had, and trouble was added to my trouble. Such, then, is the most remarkable event which befell me during my term of office. Then rose the Chief of the Police of Old Cairo, and said, "O our lord the Sultan, the most marvellous thing that happened to me since I became Wali, was on this wise": and he began ¹ Calc. Edit. "Kazir": the word is generally written "Kazdir," Sansk. Kastira, both probably from the Greek καυστινός.

THE STORY OF THE CHIEF OF THE OLD CAIRO POLICE.

I ONCE hanged ten thieves each on his own gibbet, and especially charged the guards to watch them and hinder the folk from taking any one of them down. Next morning, when I came to look at them, I found two bodies hanging from one gallows and said to the guards, "Who did this, and where is the tenth gibbet?" But they denied all knowledge of it, and I was about to beat them till they owned the truth, when they said, "Know, O Emir, that we fell asleep last night, and when we awoke we found that some one had stolen one of the bodies, gibbet and all; so we were alarmed and feared thy wrath. But, behold, up came a peasant-fellow driving his ass; whereupon we laid hands on him and killed him and hanged his body upon this gallows in the stead of the thief who had been stolen."¹ Now when I heard this, I marvelled and asked them, "What had he with him?" and they answered, "He had a pair of saddle-bags on the ass." Quoth I, "What was in them?" and quoth they, "We know not." So I said, "Bring them hither"; and when they brought them to me I bade open them, when behold, therein was the body of a murdered man cut in pieces. Now as soon as I saw this, I marvelled at the case and said in myself, "Glory to God! The cause of the hanging of this peasant was none other but his crime against this murdered man; and thy Lord is not unjust towards His servants."² And men also tell the tale of

THE THIEF AND THE SHROFF.

A CERTAIN Shroff, bearing a bag of gold pieces, once passed by a company of thieves, and one of these sharpers said to the others, "I, and I only, have the power to steal yonder purse." So they asked, "How wilt thou do it?" and he answered, "Look ye all!" and followed the money-changer till he entered his house

¹ This would have passed for a peccadillo in the "good old days." As late as 1840 the Arnaut soldiers used to "pot" any peasant who dared to ride (instead of walking) past their barracks. Life is cheap in hot countries.

² Koran, xli. 46—a passage expounding the doctrine of free will:—"He who doth right, doth it to the advantage of his own soul; and he who doth evil, doth it against the same; for thy Lord," etc.

when he threw the bag on a shelf¹ and being affected with diabetes went into the chapel of ease to do his want, calling to the slave-girl, "Bring me an ewer of water." She took the ewer and followed him to the privy, leaving the door open, whereupon the thief entered and seizing the money-bag made off with it to his companions, to whom he told what had passed,——And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the thief took the money-bag and made off with it to his companions, to whom he told what had passed. Said they, "By Allah, thou hast played a clever trick! 'tis not every one could do it; but presently the money-changer will come out of the privy, and missing the bag of money he will beat the slave-girl and torture her with grievous torture. 'Tis as though thou hast at present done nothing worthy of praise; so, if thou be indeed a sharper, return and save the girl from being beaten and questioned." Quoth he, "Inshallah! I will save both girl and purse." Then the prig went back to the Shroff's house and found him punishing the girl because of the purse; so he knocked at the door and the man said, "Who is there?" Cried the thief, "I am the servant of thy neighbour in the Exchange"; whereupon he came out to him and said, "What is thy business?" The thief replied, "My master saluteth thee and saith to thee:—Surely thou art deranged, and thoroughly so, to cast the like of this bag of money down at the door of thy shop and go away and leave it. Had a stranger hit upon it, he had made off with it and except my master had seen it and taken care of it, it had assuredly been lost to thee." So saying, he pulled out the purse and showed it to the Shroff who on seeing it said, "That is my very purse," and put out his hand to take it; but the thief said, "By Allah, I will not give thee this same, till thou write me a receipt declaring that thou hast received it! for indeed I fear my master will not believe that thou hast recovered the purse, unless I bring him thy writing to that effect, and sealed with thy signet-seal." The money-changer went in to write the paper required; and in the meantime the thief made off with the bag of money and thus was the slave-girl saved her beating. And men also tell a tale of

¹ Arab. "Suffah"; whence our Sofa. In Egypt it is a raised shelf generally of stone, about four feet high and headed with one or more arches. It is an elaborate variety of the simple "Tāk" or niche, a mere hollow in the thickness of the wall. Both are used for such articles as basin, ewer and soap, coffee-cups, water-bottles, etc.

THE CHIEF OF THE KUS POLICE AND THE SHARPER.

It is related that Alá al Dín, Chief of Police at Kús,¹ was sitting one night in his house, when behold, a personage of handsome appearance and dignified aspect came to the door, accompanied by a servant bearing a chest upon his head, and standing there said to one of the Wali's young men, "Go in and tell the Emir that I would have audience of him on some privy business." So the servant went in and told his master, who bade admit the visitor. When he entered, the Emir saw him to be a man of handsome semblance and portly presence; so he received him with honour and high distinction, seating him beside himself, and said to him, "What is thy wish?" Replied the stranger, "I am a highwayman and am minded to repent at thy hands and turn to Almighty Allah; but I would have thee help me to this, for that I am in thy district and under thine inspection. Now I have here a chest, wherein are matters worth some forty thousand dinars; and none hath so good a right to it as thou; so do thou take it and give me in exchange a thousand dinars, of thine own moneys lawfully gotten, that I may have a little capital, to aid me in my repentance,² and save me from resorting to sin for my subsistence; and with Allah Almighty be thy reward!" Speaking thus he opened the chest and showed the Wali that it was full of trinkets and jewels and bullion and ring-gems and pearls, whereat he was amazed and rejoiced with great joy. So he cried out to his treasurer, saying, "Bring hither a certain purse containing a thousand dinars";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ In Upper Egypt (Apollinopolis Parva) pronounced "Goos," the Coptic Kos-Birbir, once an emporium of the Arabian trade.

² This would appeal strongly to a pious Moslem.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Wali cried out to his treasurer, saying, "Bring hither a certain purse containing a thousand dinars"; and gave it to the highwayman, who took it and thanking him went his way under cover of the night. Now when it was the morrow, the Emir sent for the chief of the goldsmiths and shewed him the chest and what was therein; but the goldsmith found it nothing but tin and brass, and the jewels and bezel-stones and pearls all of glass; whereat the Wali was sore chagrined and sent in quest of the highwayman; but none could come at him. And men also tell the tale of

IBRAHIM BIN AL-MAHDI AND THE MERCHANT'S SISTER.

THE Caliph Al-Maamûn once said to his uncle Ibrahim bin al-Mahdi, "Tell us the most remarkable thing that thou hast ever seen." Answered he:—I hear and obey, O Commander of the Faithful. Know that I rode out one day a-pleasuring, and my ride brought me to a place where I smelt the reek of food. So my soul longed for it and I halted, O Prince of True Believers, perplexed and unable either to go on or to go in. Presently, I raised my eyes, and lo, I espied a lattice-window and behind it a wrist, than which I never beheld aught lovelier. The sight turned my brain and I forgot the smell of the food and began to plan and plot how I should get access to the house. After awhile, I observed a tailor hard by, and going up to him saluted him. He returned my salam and I asked him, "Whose house is that?" And he answered, "It belongeth to a merchant called Such an one, son of Such an one, who consorteth with none save merchants." As we were talking, behold, up came two men, of comely aspect with intelligent countenances, riding on horseback; and the tailor told me that they were the merchant's most intimate friends, and acquainted me with their names. So I urged my beast towards them and said to them, "Be I your ransom! Abu Fulân¹ awaiteth you!" and I rode with them both to the gate, where I entered and they also. Now when the master of the house saw me with them he doubted not but I was their friend; so he welcomed me and seated me in the highest stead. Then they brought the table of food and I said in myself, "Allah hath granted me my desire of the food; and now there remain the hand and the wrist." After awhile, we removed for carousal to another room, which I found tricked out with all manner of rarities; and the host paid me particular attention, addressing his talk to me, for that he took me to be a guest of his guests; whilst in like manner these two made much of me, taking me for a friend of their friend the house-master. Thus I was the object of politest attentions till we had drunk several cups of wine and there came into us a damsel as she were a willow-wand of the utmost beauty and elegance, who took a lute and playing a lively measure, sang these couplets:—

¹ i.e. "the father of a certain person"; here the merchant whose name may have been Abu'l Hasan, etc. The useful word (thingumbob, what d'ye call him, donchah, etc.) has been bodily transferred into Spanish and Portuguese—Fulano. It is of old genealogy, found in the Heb. Fulanî which applies to a person only in Ruth iv. 1; but is constantly so employed by Rabbinic writers. The Greek use ὁ δέστω.

Is it not strange one house us two contain * And still thou draw'st not near, or talk we twain?

Only our eyes tell secrets of our souls, * And broken hearts by lovers' fiery pain;

Winks with the eyelids, signs the eyebrow knows; Languishing looks and hand saluting fain.

When I heard these words my vitals were stirred, O Commander of the Faithful, and I was moved to delight, for her excessive loveliness and the beauty of the verses she sang; and I envied her her skill and said, "There lacketh somewhat to thee, O damsel!" Whereupon she threw the lute from her hand in anger, and cried, "Since when are ye wont to bring ill-mannered louts into your assemblies?" Then I repented of what I had done, seeing the company vexed with me and quoth I in my mind, "My hopes are lost by me"; and I weeted no way of escaping blame but to call for a lute, saying, "I will show you what escaped her in the air she played." Quoth the folk, "We hear and obey"; so they brought me a lute and I tuned the strings and sang these verses:—

This is thy friend perplexed for pain and pine, * Th' enamoured, down whose breast course drops of brine:

He hath this hand to the Compassionate raised * For winning wish, and that on hearts is lien:

O thou who seest one love-perishing, * His death is caused by those hands and eyne¹!

Whereupon the damsel sprang up, and throwing herself at my feet kissed them and said, "It is thine to excuse, O my Master!

¹ Lit "by his (i.e., her) hand," etc. Hence Lane (ii. 507) makes nonsense of the line

By Allah, I knew not thy quality nor heard I ever the like of this performance!" And all began extolling me and making much of me, being beyond measure delighted, and at last they besought me to sing again. So I sang a merry air, whereupon they all became drunken with music and wine, their wits left them and they were carried off to their homes, while I abode alone with the host and the girl. He drank some cups with me and then said, "O my lord, my life hath been lived in vain for that I have not known the like of thee till the present. Now, by Allah, tell me who thou art, that I may ken who is the eup-companion by Allah bestowed upon me this night." At first I returned him evasive answers and would not tell him my name; but he conjured me till I told him who I was, whereupon he sprang to his feet—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Ibrahim, son of Al-Mahdi continued:—Now when the housemaster heard my name he sprang to his feet and said, "Indeed I wondered that such gifts should belong to any but the like of thee; and Fortune hath done me a good turn, for which I cannot thank her too much. But haply, this is a dream; for how could I hope that one of the Caliphate house should visit my humble home and carouse with me this night?" I conjured him to be seated; so he sat down and began to question me as to the cause of my visit in the most courteous terms. So I told him the whole affair, first and last, hiding naught, and said to him, "Now as to the food I have had my will, but of the hand and wrist I have still to win my wish." Quoth he, "Thou shalt have thy desire of the hand and wrist also, Inshallah!" Then said he to the slave-girl, "Ho, Such-an-one, bid Such-an-one come down." And he called his slave-girls down, one by one, and showed them to me: but I saw not my mistress among them, and he said, "O my lord, there is none left save my mother and sister; but, by Allah, I must needs have them also here and show them to thee." So I marvelled at his courtesy and large-heartedness and said, "May I be thy sacrifice! Begin with the sister"; and he answered, "With joy and good will." Accordingly she came down and he showed me her hand and behold, she was the owner of the hand and wrist. Quoth I, "Allah make me thy ransom! this is the damsel whose hand and wrist I saw at the attice." Then he sent his servants without stay or delay for witnesses and bringing out two myriads¹ of gold pieces, said to the witnesses, "This our lord and master, Ibrahim son of Al-Mahdi, paternal uncle of the Commander of the Faithful, seeketh in marriage my sister Such-an-one; and I call you to witness that I give her in wedlock to him and that he hath settled upon her ten thousand dinars." And he said to me, "I give thee my sister in marriage, at the portion aforesaid." "I consent," answered I, "and am herewith content." Whereupon he gave one of the bags to her and the other to the witnesses, and said to me, "O our lord, I desire to adorn a chamber for thee, where thou mayst sleep with thy wife." But I was abashed at his generosity, and was ashamed to lie with her in his house; so I said, "Equip her and send her to my place." And by thy being, O Commander of the Faithful, he sent me with her such an equipage that my house, for all its greatness, was too strait to hold it! And I begot on her this boy that standeth in thy presence." Then Al-Maamun marvelled at the man's generosity, and said, "Gifted of Allah is he! Never heard I of his like." And he bade Ibrahim bin al-Mahdi bring him to court that he might see him. He brought him, and the Caliph conversed with him: and his wit and good breeding so pleased him that he made him one of his chief officers. And Allah is the Giver, the Bestower! Men also relate the tale of

THE WOMAN WHOSE HANDS WERE CUT OFF FOR GIVING ALMS TO THE POOR.

A CERTAIN King once made proclamation to the people of his realm, saying, "If any of you give alms of aught, I will verily and assuredly cut off his hand"; wherefore all the people abstained from alms-deed, and none could give anything to any one. Now it chanced that one day a beggar accosted a certain woman (and indeed hunger was sore upon him), and said to her, "Give me an alms"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Badrah," as has been said, is properly a weight of 10,000 dirhams or drachmas; but popularly used for largesse thrown to the people at festivals

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the beggar to the woman, "Give me an alms however small." But she answered him, "How can I give thee aught, when the King cutteth off the hands of all who give alms?" Then he said, "I conjure thee by Allah Almighty, give me an alms"; so when he adjured her by the Holy Name of Allah, she had ruth on him and gave him two scones. The King heard of this; whereupon he called her before him and cut off her hands, after which she returned to her house. Now it chanced after a while that the King said to his mother, "I have a mind to take a wife; so do thou marry me to a fair woman." Quoth she, "There is among our female slaves one who is unsurpassed in beauty; but she hath a grievous blemish." The King asked, "What is that?" and his mother answered, "She hath had both her hands cut off." Said he, "Let me see her." So she brought her to him, and he was ravished by her and married her and went in unto her, and begat upon her a son. Now this was the woman who had given two scones as an alms to the asker, and whose hands had been cut off therefor; and when the King married her, her fellow-wives envied her and wrote to the common husband that she was an unchaste, having just given birth to the boy; so he wrote to his mother, bidding her carry the woman into the desert and leave her there. The old Queen obeyed his commandment and abandoned the woman and her son in the desert; whereupon she fell to weeping for that which had befallen her and wailing with exceeding sore wail. As she went along, she came to a river and knelt down to drink, being overcome with excess of thirst for fatigue of walking and for grief; but, as she bent her head, the child which was at her neck fell into the water. Then she sat weeping bitter tears for her child, and as she wept, behold came up two men, who said to her, "What maketh thee weep?" Quoth she, "I had a child at my neck, and he hath fallen into the water." They asked, "Wilt thou that we bring him out to thee?" and she answered, "Yes." So they prayed to Almighty Allah, and the child came forth of the water to her, safe and sound. Then said they, "Wilt thou that Allah restore thee thy hands as they were?" "Yes," replied she, whereupon they prayed to Allah (extolled and exalted be He!) and her hands were restored to her, goodlier than before. Then said they, "Knowest thou who we are?" and she replied, "Allah is all-knowing¹"; and they said, "We are thy two Scones of Bread, which thou gavest in alms to the asker and which were the cause of the cutting off of thy hands.² So praise thou Allah Almighty for that He hath restored to thee thy hands and thy child." Then she praised Almighty Allah and glorified Him. And men relate a tale of

THE DEVOUT ISRAELITE.

THERE was once a devout man of the children of Israel,³ whose family span cotton-thread; and he used every day to sell the yarn and buy fresh cotton, and with the profit he laid in daily bread for his household. One morning he went out and sold the day's yarn as wont, when there met him one of his brethren, who complained to him of need; so he gave him the price of the thread and returned, empty-handed, to his family who said to him, "Where is the cotton and the food?" Quoth he, "Such an one met me and complained to me of want; whereupon I gave him the price of the yarn." And they said, "How shall we do? We have nothing to sell." Now they had a cracked trencher⁴ and a jar; so he took them to the bazar but none would buy them of him. However, presently, as he stood in the market, there passed by a man with a fish—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

1 Arab. "Allaho A'alam"; (God knows!) here the popular phrase for our, "I know not"; when it would be rude to say bluntly, "M'adii" = don't know."

2 There is a picturesque Moslem idea that good deeds become incarnate and assume human shapes to cheer the doer in his grave, to greet him when he enters Paradise, and so forth. It was borrowed from the highly imaginative faith of the Guebre, the Zoroastrian. On Chinavad or Chanjud-pul (Sirát) the Judgment bridge, 37 rods (lasan) long, straight, and 37 fathoms broad, for the good, and crooked and narrow as sword-edge for the bad, a nymph-like form will appear to the virtuous and say, "I am the personification of thy good deeds!" In Hell there will issue from a fetid gale a gloomy figure with head like a minaret, red eyeballs, hooked nose, teeth like pillars, spear-like fangs, snaky locks, etc., and when asked who he is he will reply, "I am the personification of thine evil acts!" (Dabistan, i. 285.) The Hindus also personify everything.

3 Arab. "Banū Isra'īl"; applied to the Jews when theirs was the True Faith, i.e. before the coming of Jesus, the Messiah, whose mission completed that of Moses and made it obsolete (Matrūk), even as the mission of Jesus was completed and abrogated by that of Mohammed. The term "Yahūd" = Jew is applied scornfully to the Chosen People after they rejected the Messiah, but as I have said "Israelite" is used on certain occasions, Jew on others.

4 Arab. "Kasa'ah," a wooden bowl, a porringer; also applied to a saucer.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Forty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the man took the trencher and jar to the bazar, but none would buy them of him. However, there presently passed by a man with a fish which was so stinking and so swollen that no one would buy it of him, and he said to the Jew, "Wilt thou sell me thine unsaleable ware for mine?" "Yes," answered the Jew; and giving him the wooden trencher and jar, took the fish and carried it home to his family, who said, "What shall we do with this fish?" Quoth he, "We will broil it and eat it, till it please Allah to provide bread for us." So they took it and ripping open its belly found therein a great pearl and told the head of the household who said, "See ye if it be pierced; if so, it belongeth to some one of the folk; if not, 'tis a provision of Allah for us." So they examined it and found it unpierced. Now when it was the morrow, the Jew carried it to one of his brethren which was an expert in jewels and the man asked, "O Such an one! whence haddest thou this pearl?" whereto the Jew answered, "It was a gift of Almighty Allah to us," and the other said, "It is worth a thousand dirhams and I will give thee that; but take it to Such an one, for he hath more money and skill than I." So the Jew took it to the jeweller, and said, "It is worth seventy thousand dirhams and no more." Then he paid him that sum and the Jew hired two porters to carry the money to his house. As he came to his door, a beggar accosted him, saying, "Give me of that which Allah hath given thee." Quoth the Jew to the asker, "But yesterday we were even as thou; take thee half this money"; so he made two parts of it, and each took his half. Then said the beggar, "Take back thy money and Allah bless and prosper thee in it; I am a Messenger,¹ whom thy Lord hath sent to try thee." Quoth the Jew, "To Allah be the praise and the thanks!" and abode in all delight of life he and his household till death. And men recount this story of ¹ Arab. "Rasûl" = one sent, an angel, an "apostle"; not to be translated, as by the vulgar, "prophet." Moreover, Rasûl is higher than Nabî (prophet), such as Abraham, Isaac, etc., depositaries of Al-Islam, but with a succession restricted to their own families. Nabî-mursil (Prophet-apostle) is the highest of all, one sent with a book; of these are now only four, Moses, David, Jesus, and Mohammed, the writings of the rest having perished. In Al-Islam also angels rank below men, being only intermediaries (= ἄγγελοι, nuncii, messengers) between the Creator and the created. This knowledge once did me a good turn at Harar, not a safe place in those days (First Footsteps in East Africa, p. 349).

ABU HASSAN AL-ZIYADI AND THE KHORASAN MAN.

QUOTH ABÚ HASSÁN al-Ziyádí¹:—I was once in straitened case and so needy that the grocer, the baker and other tradesmen dunned and importuned me; and my misery became extreme, for I knew of no resource nor what to do. Things being on this wise there came to me one day certain of my servants and said to me, "At the door is a pilgrim wight, who seeketh admission to thee." Quoth I, "Admit him." So he came in and behold, he was a Khorasání. We exchanged salutations and he said to me, "Tell me, art thou Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi?" and I replied, "Yes, what is thy wish?" Quoth he, "I am a stranger and am minded to make the pilgrimage; but I have with me a great sum of money, which is burdensome to bear: so I wish to deposit these ten thousand dirhams with thee whilst I make my pilgrimage and return. If the caravan march back and thou see me not, then know that I am dead, in which case the money is a gift from me to thee; but if I come back, it shall be mine." I answered, "Be it as thou wilt, and thus please Allah Almighty." So he brought out a leather bag and I said to the servant, "Fetch the scales"; and when he brought them the man weighed out the money and handed it to me, after which he went his way. Then I called the purveyors and paid them my liabilities—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fiftieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi:—I called the purveyors and paid them my liabilities and spent freely and amply, saying to myself, "By the time he returns, Allah will have relieved me with one or other of the bounties He hath by Him." However, on the very next day, the servant came in to me and said, "Thy friend the Khorasan man is at the door." "Admit him," answered I. So he came in and said to me, "I had purposed to make the pilgrimage; but news hath reached me of the decease of my father, and I have resolved to return; so give me the moneys I deposited with thee yesterday." When I heard this I was troubled and perplexed beyond measure of perplexity known to man and wotted not what reply to make him; for, if I denied it, he would put me on my oath, and I should be disgraced in the world to come; whilst, if I told him that I had spent the money, he would make an outcry and dishonour me before men. So I said to him, "Allah give thee health! This my house is no stronghold nor site of safe custody for this money. When I received thy leather bag, I sent it to one with whom it now is; so do thou return to us to-morrow and take thy money, Inshallah¹!" So he went away and I passed the night in great concern, because of his return to me; sleep visited me not nor could I close my eyes; so I rose and bade the boy saddle me the she-mule. Answered he, "O my lord, it is yet but the first third of the night and indeed we have hardly had time to rest." I returned to my bed, but sleep was forbidden to me and I ceased not to awaken the boy, and he to put me off, till break of day, when he saddled me the mule, and I mounted and rode out, not knowing whither to go. I threw the reins on the mule's shoulders and gave myself up to regrets and melancholy thoughts, whilst she fared on with me to the eastward of Baghdad. Presently, as I went along, behold, I saw a number of people approaching me and turned aside into another path to avoid them; but seeing that I wore a turband in preacher-fashion,² they followed me and hastening up to me, said, "Knowest thou the lodging of Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi?" "I am he," answered I; and they rejoined, "Obey the summons of the Commander of the Faithful." Then they carried me before Al-Ma'mun, who said to me, "Who art thou?" Quoth I, "An associate of the Kazi Abu Yûsuf and a doctor of the law and traditions." Asked the Caliph, "By what surname art thou known?" and I answered, "Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi"; whereupon quoth he, "Expound to me thy case." So

¹ A doctor of law in the reign of Al-Maamun.

¹ Here the exclamation is =D.V.; and it may be assumed generally to have that sense.

² Arab. "Taylasûn," a turband worn hood-fashion by the "Khatib" or preacher. I have sketched it in my Pilgrimage and described it (iii. 315). Some Orientalists derive Taylasûn from Atlas = satin, which is peculiarly inappropriate. The word is apparently barbarous and possibly Persian like Kalansuwah, the Daw-aysh-cup. "Thou son of a Taylasûn" = a barbarian (De Sacy, Chrest. Arab., ii. 269).

³ Arab. Kinyah vulg. "Kunyat" = patronymic or matronymic; a name beginning with "Abu" (father) or with "Umm" (mother). There are so few proper names in Al-Islam that such surnames, which, as will be seen, are of infinite variety, become necessary to distinguish individuals. Of these sobriquets I shall give specimens further on.

I recounted to him my case and he wept sore and said to me, "Out on thee! The Apostle of Allah (whom Allah bless and assain!) would not let me sleep this night, because of thee; for in early darkness¹ he appeared to me and said, Succour Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi. Whereupon I awoke and, knowing thee not, went to sleep again: but he came to me a second time and said to me, Wee to thee! Succour Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi! I awoke a second time, but knowing thee not I went to sleep again; and he came to me a third time and still I knew thee not and went to sleep again. Then he came to me once more and said, Out on thee! Succour Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi! After that I dared not sleep any more, but watched the rest of the night and aroused my people and sent them on all sides in quest of thee." Then he gave me one myriad of dirhams, saying, "This is for the Khorasani," and other ten thousand, saying, "Spend freely of this and amend thy case therewith, and set thine affairs in order." Moreover, he presented me with thirty thousand dirhams, saying, "Furnish thyself with this, and when the Procession-day² is being kept, come thou to me, that I may invest thee with some office." So I went forth from him with the money and returned home, where I prayed the dawn-prayer: and behold, presently came the Khorasani, so I carried him into the house and brought out to him one myriad of dirhams, saying, "Here is thy money." Quoth he, "It is not my very money; how cometh this?" So I told him the whole story, and he wept and said, "By Allah, haddest thou told me the fact at first, I had not pressed thee! and now, by Allah, I will not accept aught of this money"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the Khorasani to Al-Ziyadi, "By Allah, haddest thou told me the fact at first, I had not pressed thee! and now, by Allah, I will not accept aught of this money and thou art lawfully quit of it." So saying, he went away and I set my affairs in order and

¹ "Whoso seeth me in his sleep, seeth me truly; for Satan cannot assume my semblance," said (or is said to have said) Mohammed. Hence the vision is true although it comes in early night and not before dawn. See Lane, M.E., chapt. ix.

² Arab. "Al-Maukab"; the day when the pilgrims march out of the city; it is a holiday for all, high and low.

repaired on the Procession-day to Al-Maamūn's Gate, where I found him seated. When he saw me present myself he called me to him and bringing forth to me a paper from under his prayer-carpet, said to me, "This is a patent, conferring on thee the office of Kazi of the western division of Al-Madinah, the Holy City, from the Bab-al Salām¹ to the furthest limit of the township; and I appoint thee such and such monthly allowances. So fear Allah (to whom be honour and glory!) and be mindful of the solicitude of His Apostle (whom may He bless and keep!) on thine account." Then the folk marvelled at the Caliph's words and asked me their meaning; whereupon I told them the story from beginning to end and it spread abroad amongst the people. "And" (quoth he who telleth the tale) "Abu Hassan al-Ziyadi ceased not to be Kazi of Al-Madinah, the Holy City, till he died in the days of Al-Maamūn—the mercy of Allah be on him!" And among the tales men tell is one of

THE POOR MAN AND HIS FRIEND IN NEED.

THERE was once a rich man who lost all he had and became destitute, whereupon his wife advised him to ask aid and assistance of one of his intimates. So he betook himself to a certain friend of his and acquainted him with his necessities; and he lent him five hundred dinars to trade withal. Now in early life he had been a jeweller; so he took the gold and went to the jewel-bazar, where he opened a shop to buy and sell. Presently, as he sat in his shop, three men accosted him and asked for his father, and when he told them that he was deceased, they said, "Say, did he leave issue?" Quoth the jeweller, "He left the slave who is before you." They asked, "And who knoweth thee for his son?" and he answered, "The people of the bazar," whereupon they said, "Call them together, that they may testify to us that thou art his very son." So he called them and they bore witness of this; whereupon the three men delivered to him a pair of saddle-bags, containing thirty thousand dinars, besides jewels and bullion of high value, saying, "This was deposited with us in trust by thy father." Then they went away; and presently there came to him a woman, who sought of him certain of the jewels, worth five hundred dinars, which she bought and paid him three thousand for them. Upon this he arose and took five hundred dinars, and carrying them to his friend who had lent him the money, said to him, "Take the five hundred dinars I borrowed of thee; for Allah hath opened to me the gate of prosperity." Quoth the other, "Nay; I gave them to thee outright, for the love of Allah; so do thou keep them. And take this paper, but read it not till thou be at home, and do according to that which is therein." So he took the money and the paper and returned home, where he opened the scroll and found therein inscribed these couplets:—

1 "The Gate of Salutation"; at the S. Western corner of the Mosque where Mohammed is buried (Pilgrimage, ii. 60 and plan) Here "Visitation" (Ziyārah) begins.

Kinsmen of mine were those three men who came to thee; * My sire and uncles twain and Sâlih bin Ali:

So what for cash thou soldest, to my mother 'twas * Thou soldest it, and coin and gems were sent by me.

Thus doing I desired not any harm to thee * But in my presence spare thee and thy modesty.

And they also recount the story of

THE RUINED MAN WHO BECAME RICH AGAIN THROUGH A DREAM.¹

THERE lived once in Baghdad a wealthy man and made of money, who lost all his substance and became so destitute that he could earn his living only by hard labour. One night, he lay down to sleep, dejected and heavy-hearted, and saw in a dream a Speaker² who said to him, "Verily thy fortune is in Cairo: go thither and seek it." So he set out for Cairo; but when he arrived there, evening overtook him and he lay down to sleep in a mosque. Presently, by decree of Allah Almighty, a band of bandits entered the mosque and made their way thence into an adjoining house; but the owners, being aroused by the noise of the thieves, awoke and cried out; whereupon the Chief of Police came to their aid with his officers. The robbers made off; but the Wali entered the mosque and finding the man from Baghdad asleep there, laid hold of him and beat him with palm-rods so grievous a beating that he was well-nigh dead. Then they cast him into jail, where he abode three days; after which the Chief of Police sent for him and asked him, "Whence art thou?" and he answered, "From Baghdad." Quoth the Wali, "And what brought thee to Cairo?" and quoth the Baghdadi, "I saw in a dream One who said to me, Thy fortune is in Cairo; go thither to it. But when I came to Cairo, the fortune which he promised me proved to be the palm-rods thereof so generously gavest to me." The Wali laughed till he showed his wisdom-teeth and said, "O man of little wit, thrice have I seen in a dream one who said to me:—There is in Baghdad a house in such a district and of such a fashion, and its courtyard is laid out garden-wise, at the lower end whereof is a jetting fountain, and under the same a great sum of money lieth buried. Go thither and take it. Yet I went not; but thou, of the briefness of thy wit, hast journeyed from place to place on the faith of a dream, which was but an idle galimatias of sleep." Then he gave him money, saying, "Help thee back herewith to thine own country";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ The tale is told by Al-Ishâki in the reign of Al-Maamun.

² The speaker in dreams is the Heb. "Waggid," which the learned and angry Graetz (Geschichte, etc., vol. ix.) absurdly translates, "Traum-souffleur."

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the Wali gave the Baghdad man some silvers, saying, "Help thee back herewith to thine own country"; and he took the money and set out upon his homewards march. Now the house the Wali had described was the man's own house in Baghdad; so the wayfarer returned thither, and digging underneath the fountain in his garden, discovered a great treasure. And thus Allah gave him abundant fortune; and a marvellous coincidence occurred. And a story is also current of

CALIPH AL-MUTAWAKKIL AND HIS CONCUBINE MAHBUBAH.

THERE were in the palace of the Caliph Al-Mutawakkil alà'llah¹ four thousand concubines, whereof two thousand were Greeks and other two thousand slave-born Arabians² and Abyssinians; and

¹ Tenth Abbaside. A.D. 849-861.

² Arab. "Muwallad" (fem. "Muwalladah"); a rearling, a slave born in a Moslem land. The numbers may appear exaggerated, but even the petty King of Ashanti had, till the last war, 3,333 "wives."

'Obayd ibn Tāhir¹ had given him two hundred white girls and a like number of Abyssinian and native girls. Among these slave-borns was a girl of Bassorah, hight Mahbūbah, the Beloved, who was of surpassing beauty and loveliness, elegance and voluptuous grace. Moreover, she played upon the lute and was skilled in singing and making verses, and wrote a beautiful hand; so that Al-Mutawakkil fell passionately in love with her and could not endure from her a single hour. But when she saw this affection she presumed upon his favour to use him arrogantly, wherefore he waxed exceeding wroth with her and forsook her, forbidding the people of the palace to speak with her. She abode on this wise some days, but the Caliph still inclined to her; and he arose one morning and said to his courtiers, "I dreamt last night that I was reconciled to Mahbubah." They answered, "Would Allah this might be on wake!" and as they were talking, behold, in came one of the Caliph's maid-servants and whispered him; so he rose from his throne and entered the Serraglio; for the whisper had said, "Of a truth we heard singing and lute-playing in Mahbubah's chamber and we knew not what this meant." So he went straight to her apartment, where he heard her playing upon the lute and singing the following verses:—

I wander through the palace, but I sight there not a soul • To whom I may complain or will 'change a word with me.

It is as though I'd done so grievous rebel-deed • Wherefrom can no contrition e'er avail to set me free.

Have we no intercessor here to plead with King, who came • In sleep to me and took me back to grace and amity?

But when the break of day arose and showed itself again, • Then he departing sent me back to dree my privacy!

Now when the Caliph heard her voice, he marvelled at the verse, and yet more at the strange coincidence of their dreams, and entered the chamber. As soon as she perceived him, she hastened to rise and throw herself at his feet, and kissing them, said, "By Allah, O my lord, this hap is what I dreamt last night; and when I awoke I made the couplets thou hast heard." Replied Al-Mutawakkil, "By Allah, I also dreamt the like!" Then they embraced and made friends and he abode with her seven days with their nights. Now Mahbubah had written upon her cheek, in musk, the Caliph's name, which was Ja'afar; and when he saw this, he improvised the following:—

One wrote upon her cheek with musk, his name ^{was} Ja'afar hight; *
 My soul for hers who wrote upon her cheek the name I sight!
 If an her fingers have inscribed one line upon her cheek, * Full many a line in heart of mine those fingers did indite:
 O thou, whom Ja'afar sole of men possesseth for himself, * Allah fill Ja'afar¹ stream-full draught, the wine of thy delight!

When Al-Mutawakkil died his host of women forgot him, all save Mahbubah—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when Al-Mutawakkil died, his host of women forgot him all save Mahbubah who ceased not to mourn for him till she deceased and was buried by his side, the mercy of Allah be on them both! And men also tell the tale of

WARDAN: THE BUTCHER, HIS ADVENTURE WITH THE LADY AND THE BEAR.

THERE lived once in Cairo, in the days of the Caliph Al-Hâkim b' Amr'llah, a butcher named Wardân, who dealt in sheep's flesh; and there came to him every day a lady and gave him a dinar, whose weight was nigh two and a half Egyptian dinars, saying,
 "Give me a lamb." So he took the money and gave her the lamb, which she delivered to a porter she had with her; and he put it into his crate and she went away with him to her own place. Next day she came in the forenoon and this went on for a long time, the butcher gaining a dinar by her every day, till at last he began to be curious about her case and said to himself, "This woman buyeth of me a ducat-worth of meat every morning, paying ready money, and never misseth she a single day. Verily, this is a strange thing!"
 So he took an occasion of questioning the porter, in her absence, and asked him, "Whither goest thou every day with yonder woman?" And he answered, "I know not what to make of her for surprise, inasmuch as every day, after she hath taken the lamb of 1 "Ja'afar," our old Giaffar (which is painfully like "Gaffer," i.e. good father) means either a rushing river or a rivulet.

2 A regular Fellah's name, also that of a village (Pilgrimage, i. 43) where a pleasant story is told about one Haykal.

thee, she buyeth necessities of the table, fresh and dried fruits and wax-candles a dinar's worth, and taketh of a certain person, which is a Nazarene, two flagons of wine worth another dinar; and then she loadeth me with the whole and I go with her to the Wazir's Gardens, where she blindfoldeth me, so that I cannot see on what part of earth I set my feet; and, taking me by the hand, she leadeth me I know not whither. Presently, she sayeth, Set down here; and when I have done so, she giveth me an empty crate she hath ready, and taking my hand, leadeth me back to the Wazir's Gardens, the place where she bound my eyes, and there removeth the bandage and giveth me ten silver bits." "Allah be her helper!" quoth Wardan; but he redoubled in curiosity about her case; disquietude increased upon him and he passed the night in exceeding restlessness. And quoth the butcher:—Next morning she came to me as of custom, and taking the lamb, for which she paid the dinar, delivered it to the porter and went away. So I gave my shop in charge to a lad and followed her without her seeing me;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that Wardan the butcher continued:—So I gave my shop in charge to a lad and followed her without her seeing me; nor did I cease to keep her in sight, hiding behind her, till she left Cairo and came to the Wazir's Gardens. Then I concealed myself whilst she bandaged the porter's eyes, and followed her again from place to place till she came to the mountain¹ and stopped at a spot where there was a great stone. Here she made the porter set down his crate, and I waited whilst she conducted him back to the Wazir's Gardens, after which she returned, and taking out the contents of the basket instantly disappeared. Then I went up to that stone, and wrenching it up entered the hole and found behind the stone an open trap-door of brass and a flight of steps leading downwards. So I descended, little by little, till I came to a long corridor, brilliantly lighted, and followed it till I made a closed door, as it were the door of a saloon. I looked about the wall-sides near the doorway till I discovered a recess, with steps therein; then climbed up and found a little niche with a bull's-eye giving upon a saloon. Thence I looked inside and saw the lady cut off the choicest parts of the lamb and laying them in a ^{sa}ſaucepan throw the rest to a great big bear, who ate it all to the last bite. Now when she had made an end of cooking, she ate her fill, after which she set on the fruits and confections and brought out the wine and fell to drinking a cup herself and giving the bear to drink in a basin of gold. And as soon as she was heated with wine she fell to the ground in a fainting-fit and lay without motion. Then quoth I to myself, "Now is my opportunity," and taking a knife I had with me, that would cut bones before flesh,¹ went down to her and found her motionless, not a muscle of her moving. So I put my knife to the bear's gullet and pressed upon it, till I finished him by severing his head from his body, and he gave a great snort like thunder, whereat the lady started up in alarm; and, seeing the bear slain and me standing whittle in hand, she shrieked so loud a shriek that I thought the soul had left her body. Then she asked, "O Wardan, is this how thou requitest me my favours?" And she bent down over the bear, and looked fondly upon him; then finding his head divided from his body, said to me, "O Wardan, which of the two courses wouldst thou take; either obey me in what I shall say and be the means of thine own safety"—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The "Mountain" means the rocky and uncultivated ground South of Cairo; such as Jabal al-Ahmar and the geological sea-coast flanked by the old Cairo-Suez highway.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the lady, "O Wardan, which of the two courses wouldst thou take; either obey me in what I shall say and be the means of thine own safety and competency to the end of thy days, or gainsay me and so cause thine own destruction?" Answered I, "I choose rather to hearken unto thee: say what thou wilt." Quoth she, "Then slay me, and take thy need of this hoard and wend thy ways." Quoth I, "Return thou to Allah Almighty and repent, and I will marry thee, and we will live on this treasure the rest of our lives." She rejoined, "O Wardan, far be it from me! By Allah, an thou slay me not I will assuredly do away thy life! So leave bandying words with me, or thou art a lost man: this is all I have to say to thee and the Peace be with thee!" So I caught her by the hair and cut her throat; and after so doing

¹ A popular phrase = our "sharp as a razor."

² She is a woman of rank who would cause him to be assassinated.

I examined the place and found there gold and bezel-stones and pearls, such as no one King could bring together. I filled the porter's crate with as much as I could carry and covered it with the clothes I had on me. Then I shouldered it and going up out of the underground treasure-chamber, fared homewards and ceased not faring on till I came to the gate of Cairo, where behold, I fell in with ten of the body-guard of Al-Hakim b' Amri'llah¹ followed by the Prince himself, who said to me, "Ho, Wardan!" "At thy service, O King," replied I. Quoth he, "Set down the basket from thy head and fear naught, for all the treasure thou hast with thee is thine, and none shall dispute it with thee." So I set down the crate before him, and he uncovered it and looked at it: and he said, "O Wardan, come now with me to the treasure." So I returned with him to the cavern, where he found the trap-door closed, and said to me, "O Wardan, lift it; none but thou can open the treasure, for it is enchanted in thy name and nature." Said I, "By Allah, I cannot open it": but he said, "Go up to it, trusting in the blessing of Allah." So I called upon the name of Almighty Allah and advancing to the trap-door, put my hand to it; whereupon it came up as it had been of the lightest. Then said the Caliph, "Go down and bring hither what is there; for none but one of thy name and semblance and nature hath gone down thither since the place was made, and the slaying of the bear was appointed to be at thy hand. This was chronicled with me and I was awaiting its fulfilment." Accordingly (quoth Wardan) I went down and brought up all the treasure, whereupon the Caliph sent for beasts of burden and carried it away, after giving me my crate with what was therein. So I bore it home and opened me a shop in the market. "And" (saith he who telleth the tale) "this market is still extant and is known as Wardan's Market." And I have heard recount another story of

1 This is not Al-Hakim b' Amri'llah, the famous or infamous founder of the Druze (Durúz) faith and held by them to be, not an incarnation of the Godhead, but the Godhead itself in propria personâ, who reigned A.D. 926-1021; our Hakim is the orthodox Abbasside Caliph of Egypt who dated from two centuries after him (A.D. 1261). Had the former been meant, it would have thrown back this part of The Nights to an earlier date than is generally accepted. In a place still to come I shall again treat of the subject.

2 For an account of a similar kind which was told me during the last few years see "Midian Revisited," i. 15. These hiding-places are innumerable in lands of venerable antiquity like Egypt; and, if there were any contrivance for detecting hidden treasure, it would make the discoverer many times a millionaire.

3 i.e. it had been given to him or his in writing like the book left to the old woman before quoted in "Midian," etc

THE KING'S DAUGHTER AND THE APE.

THERE was once a Sultan's daughter, whose heart was taken with love of a black slave; and it so chanced one day that an ape-leader passed under her lattice, with a great ape¹ so she unveiled her face and looking upon the ape, signed to him with her eyes, whereupon he broke his bonds and chain and climbed up to the Princess, who hid him, and night and day he abode there. Her father heard of this and would have killed her;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Sultan heard of this he would have slain his daughter; but she smoked his design; and, disguising herself in Mameluke's dress, mounted horse after loading a mule with gold and bullion, and precious stuffs past all account; then carrying with her the ape she fled to Cairo, where she took up her abode in one of the houses without the city and upon the verge of the Suez-desert. Now every day she used to buy meat of a young man, a butcher, but she came not to him till after noon-day; and then she was so yellow and disordered in face that he said in his mind, "There must indeed hang some mystery by this slave." Accordingly (quoth the butcher) one day when she came to me as usual, I went out after her secretly, and ceased not to follow her from place to place, so that she saw me not, till she came to her lodging on the edge of the waste and entered; and I looked in upon her through a cranny, and saw her as soon as she was at home, kindle a fire and cook the meat, of which she ate her sufficiency and served up the rest to a baboon she had by her and he did the same. Then she put off the slave's habit and donned the richest of women's apparel; and so I knew that she was a lady. After this she set on wine and drank till she swooned away, when the ape spread over her a silken coverlet. Then I went down in the midst of the place and the ape, becoming aware of me, would have torn me in pieces; but I made haste to pull out my knife and slit his paunch and his bowels fell out. The noise aroused the young lady, who awoke terrified and trembling, and she shrieked such a shriek that her soul well-nigh fled her body. Then she fell down in a fainting-fit and when she came to herself, she said to me, "What moved thee to do thus?" But I spoke her fair for awhile till her trouble subsided and I took her to wife. Now she was distraught, so I complained of my case to a certain old woman who engaged to manage the affair and said to me, "Needs must thou bring me a cooking-pot full of virgin vinegar and a pound of the herb pellitory called wound-wort. So I brought her what she sought, and she laid the pellitory in the pot with the vinegar and set it on the fire till it was thoroughly boiled. Then she bade me bring the girl, and I brought her and the steam of the pellitory in the pot caused her to swoon away. Now when she recovered from her swoon, her weakness of wits had left her and she abode with me in all delight and solace of life, and thereupon I lived with her;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Arab. "Kird" (pron. in Egypt "Gird"). It is usually the hideous Abyssinian cynocephalus which is tamed by the ape-leader popularly called Kuaydati (Lane, M.E., chapt. xx.). They are powerful animals, and bite like greyhounds.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the young man continued:—Thereupon I lived with her; and she took the old woman to be to her in the stead of her mother, "and" (said he who told me the tale) "the old woman and the young man and his wife abode in joy and cheer till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and the Sunderer of societies; and glory be to the Ever-living One, who dieth not and in whose hand is Dominion of the world visible and invisible!" And another tale they tell is that of

END OF VOLUME IV.

والسلام

BENARES. MDCCCLXXXV: PRINTED BY THE KAMASHASTRA SOCIETY FOR PRIVATE SUBSCRIBERS ONLY.

VOLUME V.

PLAIN AND LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS, NOW

ENTITLED

THE BOOK OF THE

Thousand Nights and a Night

WITH INTRODUCTION EXPLANATORY NOTES ON THE
MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF MOSLEM MEN AND A TERMINAL ESSAY UPON THE HISTORY OF THE NIGHTS

BY

RICHARD F. BURTON

TO DOCTOR GEORGE BIRD.

MY DEAR BIRD,

This is not a strictly medical work, although in places treating of subjects which may modestly be called hygienic. I inscribe it to you because your knowledge of Egypt will enable you to appreciate its finer touches; and for another and a yet more cogent reason, namely, that you are one of my best and oldest friends.

Ever yours sincerely,

RICHARD F. BURTON.

ATHENÆUM CLUB, October 20, 1885.

THE EBONY HORSE.¹

THERE was once in times of yore and ages long gone before a great and puissant King, of the Kings of the Persians, Sábúr by name, who was the richest of all the Kings in store of wealth and dominion and who surpassed each and every in wit and wisdom. He was generous, open handed and beneficent, and he gave to those who sought him and repelled not those who resorted to him; and he comforted the broken-hearted and honourably entreated those who fled to him for refuge. Moreover, he loved the poor and was hospitable to strangers and did the oppressed justice upon the oppressor. He had three daughters, like full moons of shining light or flower-gardens blooming bright; and a son as he were the moon; and it was his wont to keep two festivals in the twelvemonth, those of the Nau-Roz, or New Year, and Mihrgán the Autumnal Equinox,² on which occasions he threw open his palaces and gave largesse and made proclamations of safety and security and promoted his chamberlains and viceroys; and the people of his realm came in to him and saluted him and gave him joy of the holy day, bringing him gifts and servants and eunuchs. Now he loved science and geometry, and one festival-day as he sat on his kingly throne there came in to him three wise men, cunning artificers and past masters in all manner craft and inventions, skilled in making things curious and rare, such as confound the wit; and versed in the knowledge of occult truths and perfect in mysteries and subtleties. And they were of three different tongues and countries, the first a Hindi or Indian,³ the second a Roumi or Greek, and the third a Farsi or Persian. The Indian came forward and prostrating himself before the King, wished him joy of the festival and laid before him a present befitting his dignity; that is to say, a man of gold, set with precious gems and jewels of price and hending in hand

1 This tale (one of those translated by Galland) is best and fullest in the Bresl. Edit., iii. 329.

2 Europe has degraded this autumnal festival, the Sun-fête Mihrgán (which balanced the vernal Nau-roz) into Michaelmas and its goose-massacre. It was so called because it began on the 16th of Mihr, the seventh month, and lasted six days, with feasts, festivities, and great rejoicings in honour of the Sun, who now begins his southing-course to gladden the other half of the world.

3 "Hindi" is an Indian Moslem as opposed to "Hindú," a pagan, or Gentoo a golden trumpet. When Sabur¹ saw this, he asked, "O sage, what is the virtue of this figure?" and the Indian answered, "O my lord, if this figure be set at the gate of thy city, it will be a guardian over it; for if an enemy enter the place, it will blow this clarion against him and he will be seized with a palsy and drop down dead." Much the King marvelled at this and cried, "By Allah, O sage, an this thy word be true, I will grant thee thy wish and thy desire." Then came forward the Greek and prostrating himself before the King, presented him with a basin of silver, in whose midst was a peacock of gold, surrounded by four-and-twenty pea-chicks of the same metal. Sabur looked at them and turning to the Greek, said to him, "O sage, what is the virtue of this peacock?" "O my lord," answered he, "as often as an hour of the day or night passeth, it pecketh one of its young and crieth out and flappeth its wings, till the four-and-twenty hours are accomplished; and when the month cometh to an end it will open its mouth and thou shalt see the crescent therein." And the King said, "An thou speak sooth, I will bring thee to thy wish and thy desire." Then came forward the Persian sage and prostrating himself before the King, presented him with a horse² of the blackest ebony-wood inlaid with gold and jewels, and ready harnessed with saddle, bridle and stirrups such as besit Kings; which when Sabur saw, he marvelled with exceeding marvel and was confounded at the beauty of its form and the ingenuity of its fashion. So he asked, "What is the use of this horse of wood, and what is its virtue and what the secret of its movement?" and the Persian answered, "O my lord, the virtue of this horse is that, if one mount him, it will carry him whither he will and fare with its

1 The orig. Persian word is "Sháh-púr" = King's son: the Greeks (who had no sh) preferred Σαβῦρ; the Romans turned it into Sapor and the Arabs (who lack the p) into Sábūr. See p. x. Hamzæ Isphahanen's Annalium Libri x.: Gottwaldt, Lipsiæ mdccclxviii.

2 The magic horse may have originated with the Hindu tale of a wooden Garuda (the bird of Vishnu) built by a youth for the purpose of a vehicle. It came with the "Moors" to Spain, and appears in "Le Cheval du Fust," a French poem of the thirteenth century. Thence it passed over to England as shown by Chaucer's "Half-told tale of Cambuscan (Janghíz Khan?) bold," as

The wondrous steed of brass
On which the Tartar King did ride;

And Leland (Itinerary) derives "Rutlandshire" from "a man named Rutter, who rode round it on a wooden horse constructed by art magic." Lane (ii. 548) quotes the parallel story of Cleomades and Claremond, which Mr. Keightley (Tales and Popular Fictions, chapt. ii.) dates from our thirteenth century. See vol. i. night xvi.

rider through the air and cover in a single day the space of a year." The King marvelled and was amazed at these three wonders, following thus hard upon one another on the same day, and turning to the sage, said to him, "By Allah the Omnipotent, and our Lord the Beneficent, who created all creatures and feedeth them with meat and drink, an thy speech be veritable and the virtue of thy contrivance appear, I will assuredly give thee whatsoever thou lustest for and will bring thee to thy wish and thy desire¹!" Then he entertained the sages three days, that he might make trial of their gifts; after which they brought the figures before him and each took the creature he had wroughten and showed him the mystery of its movement. The trumpeter blew the trump; the peacock pecked its chicks and the Persian sage mounted the ebony horse, whereupon it soared with him high in air and descended again. When King Sabur saw all this, he was amazed and perplexed and felt like to fly for joy and said to the three sages, "Now I am certified of the truth of your words, and it behoveth me to quit me of my promise. Ask ye, therefore, what ye will, and I will give you that same." Now the report of the King's daughters had reached the sages, so they answered, "If the King be content with us and accept of our gifts and allow us to prefer a request to him, we crave of him that he give us his three daughters in marriage, that we may be his sons-in-law; for that the stability of Kings may not be gainsaid." Quoth the King, "I grant you that which you wish and you desire," and bade summon the Kazi forthright, that he might marry each of the sages to one of his daughters. Now it fortuned that the Princesses were behind a curtain, looking on; and when they heard this, the youngest considered her husband to be and behold, he was an old man,² an hundred years of age, with hair frosted, forehead drooping, eyebrows mangy, ears slitten, beard and mustachioes stained and dyed; eyes red and a-goggle; cheeks bleached and hollow; flabby nose like a brinjall or egg-plant³; face like a cobbler's apron,

1 All Moslems, except those of the Málki school, hold that the maker of an image representing anything of life will be commanded on the Judgment Day to animate it, and failing will be duly sent to the Fire. This severity arose apparently from the necessity of putting down idol-worship and, perhaps, for the same reason the Greek Church admits pictures but not statues. Of course the command has been honoured with extensive breaching; for instance, all the Sultans of Stambul have had their portraits drawn and painted.

2 This description of ugly old age is written with true Arab verve.

3 Arab. "Badinján": Hind. Bengan; Pers. Bādingán or Bādījān; the Mala insana (Solanum pomiferum or S. Melongena) of the Romans, well known in Southern Europe. It is of two kinds, the red (Solanum lycopersicum) and the teeth overlapping and lips like camel's kidneys, loose and pendulous; in brief, a terror, a horror, a monster, for he was of the folk of his time the unsightliest and of his age the frightfullest: sundry of his grinders had been knocked out and his eye-teeth were like the tusks of the Jinni who frighteneth poultry in hen-houses. Now the girl was the fairest and most graceful of her time, more elegant than the gazelle however tender, than the gentlest zephyr blander, and brighter than the moon at her full; for amorous fray right suitable; confounding in graceful sway the waving bough and outdoing in swimming gait the pacing roe; in fine, she was fairer and sweeter by far than all her sisters. So when she saw her suitor, she went to her chamber and strewed dust on her head and tore her clothes and fell to buffeting her face and weeping and wailing. Now the Prince, her brother, Kamar al-Akmár, or the Moon of Moons hight, was then newly returned from a journey and hearing her weeping and crying came in to her (for he loved her with fond affection, more than his other sisters), and asked her, "What aileth thee? What hath befallen thee? Tell me and conceal naught from me." So she smote her breast and answered, "O my brother and my dear one, I have nothing to hide. If the palace be straitened upon thy father, I will go out; and if he be resolved upon a foul thing, I will separate myself from him, though he consent not to make provision for me; and my Lord will provide." Quoth he, "Tell me what meaneth this talk and what hath straitened thy breast and troubled thy temper." "O my brother and my dear one," answered the Princess, "know that my father hath promised me in marriage to a wicked magician who brought him, as a gift, a horse of black wood, and hath bewitched him with his craft and his egromancy; but, as for me, I will none of him, and would, because of him, I had never come into this world!" Her brother soothed her and solaced her, then fared to his sire and said, "What be this wizard to whom thou hast given my youngest sister in marriage, and what is this present which he hath brought thee, so that thou hast killed¹ my sister with chagrin? It is not right that this should be." Now the Persian was standing black (S. Melongena). The Spaniards know it as "berengeria," and when Saneho Panza (part ii chapt. 2) says, "The Moors are fond of egg-plants," he means more than appears. The vegetable is held to be exceedingly heating and thereby to breed melancholia and madness; hence one says to a man that has done something eccentric, "Thou hast been eating brinjalls."

1 Again to be understood Hibernicæ, "kilt."

No. 26.

The Ebony Horse.

“The horse forthwith soared with him high in ether, as it were a bird, and gave not over flying till it disappeared. . . . The King . . . was enraged with sore rage . . . and gave himself up to weeping and keening, he and his wife and daughters and all the folk of the city.”

ly, and when he heard the Prince's words, he was mortified and filled with fury and the King said, "O my son, an thou sawest this horse, thy wit would be confounded and thou wouldst be amazed with amazement." Then he bade the slaves bring the horse before him and they did so; and, when the Prince saw it, it pleased him. So (being an accomplished cavalier) he mounted it forthright and struck its sides with the shovel-shaped stirrup-irons: but it stirred not and the King said to the Sage, "Go show him its movement, that he also may help thee to win thy wish." Now the Persian bore the Prince a grudge because he willed not he should have his sister; so he showed him the pin of ascent on the right side of the horse and saying to him, "Trill this," left him. Thereupon the Prince trilled the pin and lo! the horse forthwith soared with him high in ether, as it were a bird, and gave not over flying till it disappeared from men's espying, whereat the King was troubled and perplexed about his case and said to the Persian, "O sage, look how thou mayst make him descend." But he replied, "O my lord, I can do nothing, and thou wilt never see him again till Resurrection-day, for he, of his ignorance and pride, asked me not of the pin of descent and I forgot to acquaint him therewith." When the King heard this he was enraged with sore rage; and bade bastinado the sorcerer and clap him in jail, whilst he himself cast the crown from his head and beat his face and smote his breast. Moreover, he shut the doors of his palaces and gave himself up to weeping and keening, he and his wife and daughters and all the folk of the city; and thus their joy was turned to annoy and their gladness changed into sore affliction and sadness. Thus far concerning them; but as regards the Prince, the horse gave not over soaring with him till he drew near the sun, whereat he gave himself up for lost and saw death in the skies, and was confounded at his case, repenting him of having mounted the horse and saying to himself, "Verily, this was a device of the Sage to destroy me on account of my youngest sister; but there is no Majesty and there is no Might save in Allah, the Glorious, the Great! I am lost without recourse; but I wonder did not he who made the ascent-pin make also a descent-pin?" Now he was a man of wit and knowledge and intelligence; so he fell to feeling all the parts of the horse, but saw nothing save a screw, like a cock's head, on its right shoulder, and the like on the left, when quoth he to himself, "I see no sign save these things like buttons." Presently he turned the right-hand pin, whereupon the horse flew heavenwards with increased speed. So he left it, and looking at the sinister shoulder and finding another pin, he wound it up and immediately the steed's upward motion slowed and ceased and it began to descend, little by little, towards the face of the earth, while the rider became yet more cautious and careful of his life.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Prince wound up the sinister screw, the steed's upward motion slowed and ceased, and it began to descend, little by little, towards the earth, while the rider became yet more cautious and careful of his life. And when he saw this and knew the uses of the horse, his heart was filled with joy and gladness and he thanked Almighty Allah for that He had deigned deliver him from destruction. Then he began to turn the horse's head whithersoever he would, making it rise and fall at pleasure, till he had gotten complete mastery over its every movement. He ceased not to descend the whole of that day, for that the steed's ascending flight had borne him afar from the earth; and, as he descended, he diverted himself with viewing the various cities and countries over which he passed and which he knew not, never having seen them in his life. Amongst the rest, he descried a city ordered after the fairest fashion in the midst of a verdant and riant land, rich in trees and streams, with gazelles pacing daintily over the plains; whereat he fell a-musing and said to himself, "Would I knew the name of yon town and in what land it be!" And he took to circling about it and observing it right and left. By this time, the day began to decline and the sun drew near to its downing; and he said in his mind, "Verily I find no goodlier place to night in than this city; so I will lodge here and early on the morrow I will return to my kith and kin and my kingdom; and tell my father and family what hath passed and acquaint him with what mine eyes have seen." Then he addressed himself to seeking a place wherein he might safely bestow himself and his horse and where none should descry him, and presently behold, he espied a-middlemost of the city a palace rising high in upper air surrounded by a great wall with lofty crenelles and battlements, guarded by forty black slaves, clad in complete mail and armed with spears and swords, bows and arrows. Quoth he, "This is a goodly place," and turned the descent-pin, whereupon the horse sank down with him like a weary bird, and alighted gently on the terrace-roof of the palace. So the Prince dismounted and ejaculating "Alhamdulillah"—praise be to Allah¹—he began to go round about the horse and examine it saying, "By Allah, He who fashioned thee with these perfections was a cunning craftsman, and if the Almighty extend the term of my life and restore me to my country and kinsfolk in safety and reunite me with my father, I will assuredly bestow upon Him all manner bounties and benefit Him with the utmost beneficence." By this time night had overtaken him and he sat on the roof till he was assured that all in the palace slept; and indeed hunger and thirst were sore upon him, for that he had not tasted food nor drunk water since he parted from his sire. So he said within himself, "Surely the like of this palace will not lack of victual"; and, leaving the horse above, went down in search of somewhat to eat. Presently, he came to a staircase and descending it to the bottom, found himself in a court paved with white marble and alabaster, which shone in the light of the moon. He marvelled at the place and the goodliness of its fashion, but sensed no sound of speaker and saw no living soul and stood in perplexed surprise, looking right and left and knowing not whither he should wend. Then said he to himself, "I may not do better than return to where I left my horse and pass the night by it; and as soon as day shall dawn I will mount and ride away."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Fifty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the king's son to himself, "I may not do better than pass the night by my horse; and as soon as day shall dawn I will mount and ride away." However, as he tarried talking to himself, he espied a light within the palace, and making towards it, found that it came from a candle that stood before a door of the Harim, at the head of a sleeping eunuch, as he were one of the Ifrits of Solomon or a tribesman of the Jinn, longer than lumber and broader than a bench. He lay before the door, with the pommel of his sword gleaming in the flame of the candle, and at his head was a bag of leather² hanging from a column of granite. When the Prince saw this, he was affrighted and said, "I crave help from Allah the Supreme! O mine

¹ i.e. for fear of the evil eye injuring the palace and, haply, himself.

² The "Sufrah" before explained as acting provision-bag and table-cloth.

Holy One, even as Thou hast already delivered me from destruction, so vouchsafe me strength to quit myself of the adventure of this palace!" So saying, he put out his hand to the budget and taking it, carried it aside and opened it and found in it food of the best. He ate his fill and refreshed himself and drank water, after which he hung up the provision-bag in its place and drawing the eunuch's sword from its sheath, took it, whilst the slave slept on, knowing not whence destiny should come to him. Then the Prince fared forwards into the palace and ceased not till he came to a second door, with a curtain drawn before it; so he raised the portière and behold, on entering he saw a couch of the whitest ivory, inlaid with pearls and jacinths and jewels, and four slave-girls sleeping about it. He went up to the couch, to see what was thereon, and found a young lady lying asleep, chemised with her hair¹ as she were the full moon rising² over the Eastern horizon, with flower-white brow and shining hair-parting and cheeks like blood-red anemones and dainty moles thereon. He was amazed at her as she lay in her beauty and loveliness, her symmetry and grace, and he reeked no more of death. So he went up to her, trembling in every nerve and, shuddering with pleasure, kissed her on the right cheek; whereupon she awoke forthright and opened her eyes, and seeing the Prince standing at her head, said to him, "Who art thou and whence comest thou?" Quoth he, "I am thy slave and thy lover." Asked she, "And who brought thee hither?" and he answered, "My Lord and my fortune." Then said Shams al-Nahár³ (for such was her name), "Haply thou art he who demanded me yesterday of my father in marriage and he rejected thee, pretending that thou wast foul of favour. By Allah, my sire lied in his throat when he spoke this thing, for thou art not other than beautiful." Now the son of the King of Hind had sought her in marriage, but her father had rejected him, for that he was ugly and uncouth, and she thought the Prince was he. So when she saw his beauty and grace (for indeed he was like the radiant moon) the syntheism⁴ of love gat hold of her heart as it were a flaming fire, and they fell to talk and converse. Suddenly, her ¹ Eastern women in hot weather lie mother-nude under a sheet here represented by the hair.

² Hindu fable turns this simile into better poetry, "She was like a second and a more wondrous moon made by the Creator."

³ "Son of the Day."

⁴ Arab. "Shirk" = worshipping more than one God. A theological term here most appropriately used.

waiting-women awoke, and seeing the Prince with their mistress, said to her, "O my lady, who is this with thee?" Quoth she, "I know not; I found him sitting by me when I woke up; haply 'tis he who seeketh me in marriage of my sire." Quoth they, "O my lady, by Allah the All-Father, this is not he who seeketh thee in marriage, for he is hideous and this man is handsome and of high degree. Indeed, the other is not fit to be his servant.¹" Then the handmaidens went out to the eunuch, and finding him slumbering, awoke him, and he started up in alarm. Said they, "How happeth it that thou art on guard at the palace and yet men come in to us whilst we are asleep?" When the black heard this he sprang in haste to his sword, but found it not, and fear took him and trembling. Then he went in confounded to his mistress, and seeing the Prince sitting at talk with her, said to him, "O my lord, art thou man or Jinni?" Replied the Prince, "Woe to thee, O unluckiest of slaves; how darest thou even the sons of the royal Chosroës² with one of the unbelieving Satans?" And he was as a raging lion. Then he took the sword in his hand and said to the slave, "I am the King's son-in-law, and he hath married me to his daughter, and bidden me go in to her." And when the eunuch heard these words he replied, "O my lord, if thou be indeed of kind a man as thou avouchest, she is fit for none but for thee, and thou art worthier of her than any other." Thereupon the eunuch ran to the King, shrieking loud and rending his raiment and heaving dust upon his head; and when the King heard his outcry, he said to him, "What hath befallen thee? speak quickly and be brief, for thou hast fluttered my heart." Answered the eunuch, "O King, come to thy daughter's succour, for a devil of the Jinn, in the likeness of a King's son, hath got possession of her; so up and at him!" When the King heard this he thought to kill him, and said, "How camest thou to be careless of my daughter and let this

¹ The Bnl. Edit. as usual abridges (vol. i. 534). The Prince lands on the palace-roof where he leaves his horse, and finding no one in the building goes back to the terrace. Suddenly he sees a beautiful girl approaching him with a party of her women, suggesting to him these couplets:—

She came without tryst in the darkest hour, * Like full moon lighting horizon's night:

Slim-formed, there is not in the world her like * For grace of form or for gifts of sprite:

"Praise Him who made her from semen drop," * I cried, when her beauty first struck my sight;

I guard her from eyes, seeking refuge with * The Lord of mankind and of morning-light.

The two then made acquaintance and "follows what follows."

² Arab. "Akásirah," explained (vol. i., night viii.) as the plur. of Kistrá.

demon come at her?" Then he betook himself to the Princess's palace, where he found her slave-women standing to await him, and asked them, "What is come to my daughter?" "O King," answered they, "slumber overcame us, and when we awoke we found a young man sitting upon her couch in talk with her, as he were the full moon; never saw we aught fairer of favour than he. So we questioned him of his case and he declared that thou hadst given him thy daughter in marriage. More than this we know not, nor do we know if he be a man or a Jinni; but he is modest and well-bred, and doth nothing unseemly or which leadeth to disgrace." Now when the King heard these words his wrath cooled and he raised the curtain little by little and, looking in, saw sitting at talk with his daughter a Prince of the goodliest with a face like the full moon for shcen. At this sight he could not contain himself of his jealousy for his daughter's honour; and, putting aside the curtain, rushed in upon them drawn sword in hand like a furious Ghul. Now when the Prince saw him he asked the Princess, "Be this thy sire?" and she answered, "Yes."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixtieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Prince saw the King rushing in upon them, drawn sword in hand like a furious Ghul, he asked the Princess, "Be this thy sire?" and she answered, "Yes." Whereupon he sprang to his feet and, seizing his sword, cried out at the King with so terrible a cry that he was confounded. Then the youth would have fallen on him with the sword; but the King, seeing that the Prince was doughtier than he, sheathed his scymitar and stood till the young man came up to him, when he accosted him courteously and said to him, "O youth, art thou a man or a Jinni?" Quoth the Prince, "Did I not respect thy right as mine host and thy daughter's honour, I would spill thy blood! How darest thou follow me with devils, I that am a Prince of the sons of the royal Chrosoës, who, had they wished to take thy kingdom, could shake thee like an earthquake from thy glory and thy dominions and spoil thee of all thy possessions?" Now when the King heard these words he was confounded with awe and bodily fear of him and rejoined, "If thou indeed be of the sons of the Kings, as thou pretendest, how cometh it that thou enterest my palace without my permission and smirchest mine honour, making thy way to my daughter and feigning that thou art her husband and claiming that I have given her to thee to wife, I that have slain Kings and Kings' sons, who sought her of me in marriage? And now who shall save thee from my might and majesty when, if I cried out to my slaves and servants and bade them put thee to the vilest of deaths they would slay thee forthright? Who shall deliver thee out of my hand?" When the Prince heard this speech of the King he answered, "Verily, I wonder at thee and at the shortness and denseness of thy wit! Say me, canst covet for thy daughter a mate comelier than myself, and hast ever seen a stouter-hearted man or one better fitted for a Sultan or a more glorious in rank and dominion than I?" Rejoined the King, "Nay, by Allah! but I would have had thee, O youth, act after the custom of Kings and demand her from me to wife before witnesses, that I might have married her to thee publicly; and now, even were I to marry her to thee privily, yet hast thou dishonoured me in her person." Rejoined the Prince, "Thou sayest sooth, O King, but if thou summon thy slaves and thy soldiers, and they fall upon me and slay me, as thou pretendest, thou wouldst but publish thine own disgrace, and the folk would be divided between belief in thee and disbelief in thee. Wherefore, O King, thou wilt do well, meseemeth, to turn from this thought to that which I shall counsel thee." Quoth the King, "Let me hear what thou hast to advise"; and quoth the Prince, "What I have to propose to thee is this: either do thou meet me in combat singular, I and thou; and he who slayeth his adversary shall be held the worthier and having a better title to the kingdom; or else, let me be this night and whenas dawns the morn, draw out against me thy horsemen and footmen and servants; but first tell me their number." Said the King, "They art forty thousand horse, besides my own slaves and their followers,¹ who are the like of them in number." Thereupon said the Prince, "When the day shall break, do thou array them against me and say to them:—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ The dearest ambition of a slave is not liberty but to have a slave of his own. This was systematised by the servile rulers known in history as the Mameluke Beys and to the Egyptians as the Ghuzz. Each had his household of servile pages and squires, who looked forward to filling the master's place as knight or baron.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-first Night,

She continued, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that quoth the Prince, "When day shall break, do thou array them against me and say to them:—This man is a suitor to me for my daughter's hand, on condition that he shall do battle single-handed against you all; for he pretendeth that he will overcome you and put you to the rout, and indeed that ye cannot prevail against him. After which leave me to do battle with them: if they slay me, then is thy secret the surer guarded and thine honour the better warded; and if I overcome them and see their backs, then is it the like of me a King should covet to his son-in-law." So the King approved his opinion and accepted his proposition, despite his awe at the boldness of his speech and amaze at the pretensions of the Prince to meet in fight his whole host, such as he had described it to him, being at heart assured that he would perish in the fray and so he should be quit of him and freed from the fear of dishonour. Thereupon he called the eunuch and bade him go to his Wazir without stay and delay and command him to assemble the whole of the army and cause them don their arms and armour and mount their steeds. So the eunuch carried the King's order to the Minister, who straightway summoned the Captains of the host and the Lords of the realm and bade them don their harness of derring-do and mount horse and sally forth in battle array. Such was their case; but as regards the King, he sat a long while conversing with the young Prince, being pleased with his wise speech and good sense and fine breeding. And when it was daybreak he returned to his palace and seating himself on his throne commanded his merry men to mount and bade them saddle one of the best of the royal steeds with handsome selle and housings and trappings and bring it to the Prince. But the youth said, "O King, I will not mount horse till I come in view of the troops and review them." "Be it as thou wilt," replied the King. Then the two repaired to the parade-ground, where the troops were drawn up, and the young Prince looked upon them and noted their great number; after which the King cried out to them, saying, "Ho, all ye men, there is come to me a youth who seeketh my daughter in marriage; and in very sooth never have I seen a goodlier than he; no, nor a stouter of heart nor a doughtier of arm, for he pretendeth that he can overcome you, single-handed, and force you to flight, and that were ye an hundred thousand in number, yet for him would ye be but few. Now when he chargeth down on you, do ye receive him upon point of pike and sharp of sabre; for indeed he hath undertaken a mighty matter." Then quoth the King to the Prince, "Up, O my son, and do thy devoir on them." Answered he, "O King, thou dealest not justly and fairly by me; how shall I go forth against them, seeing that I am afoot and the men be mounted?" The King retorted, "I bade thee mount, and thou refusedst; but choose thou which of my horses thou wilt." Then he said, "Not one of thy horses pleaseth me, and I will ride none but that on which I came." Asked the king, "And where is thy horse?" "Atop of thy palace." "In what part of my palace?" "On the roof." Now when the King heard these words, he cried, "Out on thee! this is the first sign thou hast given of madness. How can the horse be on the roof? But we shall at once see if thou speak truth or lies." Then he turned to one of his chief officers and said to him, "Go to my palace and bring me what thou findest on the roof." So all the people marvelled at the young Prince's words, saying one to other, "How can a horse come down the steps from the roof? Verily this is a thing whose like we never heard." In the mean time the King's messenger repaired to the palace and mounting to the roof, found the horse standing there and never had he looked on a handsomer; but when he drew near and examined it, he saw that it was made of ebony and ivory. Now the officer was accompanied by other high officers, who also looked on and they laughed one to other, saying, "Was it of the like of this horse that the youth spake? We cannot deem him else than mad; however, we shall soon see the truth of his case."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-second Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the high officials looked upon the horse, they laughed one to other and said, "Was it of the like of this horse that the youth spake? We cannot deem him else than mad; however, we shall soon see the truth of his case. Peradventure herein is some mighty matter, and he is a man of high degree." Then they lifted up the horse bodily, and carrying it to the King set it down before him, and all the lieges flocked round to look at it, marvelling at the beauty of its proportions and the richness of its saddle and bridle. The King also admired it and wondered at it with extreme wonder; and he asked the Prince, "O youth, is this thy horse?" He answered, "Yes, O King, this is my horse, and thou shalt soon see the marvel it showeth." Rejoined the King, "Then take and mount it"; and the Prince retorted, "I will not mount till the troops withdraw afar from it." So the King bade them retire a bowshot from the horse; whereupon quoth its owner, "O King, see thou; I am about to mount my horse and charge upon thy host and scatter them right and left and split their hearts asunder." Said the King, "Do as thou wilt; and spare not their lives, for they will not spare thine." Then the Prince mounted, whilst the troops ranged themselves in ranks before him, and one said to another, "When the youth cometh between the ranks, we will take him on the points of our pikes and the sharps of our sabres." Quoth another, "By Allah, this is a mere misfortune; how shall we slay a youth so comely of face and shapely of form?" And a third continued, "Ye will have hard work to get the better of him; for the youth had not done this, but for what he knew of his own prowess and pre-eminence of valour." Meanwhile, having settled himself in his saddle, the Prince turned the pin of ascent; whilst all eyes were strained to see what he would do, whereupon the horse began to heave and rock and sway to and fro and make the strangest of movements steed ever made, till its belly was filled with air and it took flight with its rider and soared high into the sky. When the King saw this, he cried out to his men, saying, "Woe to you! catch him, catch him, ere he 'scape you!" But his Wazirs and Viceroy said to him, "O King, can a man overtake the flying bird? This is surely none but some mighty magician or Marid of the Jinn or devil, and Allah save thee from him. So praise thou the Almighty for the deliverance of thee and of all thy host from his hand." Then the King returned to his palace after seeing the feat of the Prince and, going in to his daughter, acquainted her with what had befallen them both on the parade-ground. He found her grievously afflicted for the Prince and bewailing her separation from him; wherefore she fell sick with violent sickness and took to her pillow. Now when her father saw her on this wise, he pressed her to his breast and kissing her between the eyes, said to her, "O my daughter, praise Allah Almighty and thank Him for that He hath delivered us from this crafty enchanter, this villain, this low fellow, this thief, who thought only of seducing thee!" And he repeated to her the story of the Prince and how he had disappeared in the firmament; and he abused him and cursed him knowing not how dearly his daughter loved him. But she paid no heed to his words and did but redouble in her tears and wails, saying to herself, "By Allah, I will neither eat meat nor drain drink, till Allah reunite me with him!" Her father was greatly concerned for her case and mourned much over her plight; but for all he could do to soothe her, love-longing only increased on her.—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-third Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King mourned much over his daughter's plight but, for all he could do to soothe her, love longing only increased on her. Thus far concerning the King and Princess Shams al-Nahár; but as regards Prince Kamar al-Akmar, when he had risen high in air, he turned his horse's head towards his native land, and being alone mused upon the beauty of the Princess and her loveliness. Now he had enquired of the King's people the name of the city and of its King and his daughter; and men had told him that it was the city of Sana'a.¹ So he journeyed with all speed till he drew near his father's capital and making an airy circuit about the city, alighted on the roof of the King's palace, where he left his horse, whilst he descended into the palace and seeing its threshold strewn with ashes, thought that one of his family was dead. Then he entered, as of wont, and found his father and mother and sisters clad in mourning raiment of black, all pale of faces and lean of frames. When his sire descried him and was assured that it was indeed his son, he cried out with a great cry and fell down in a fit, but after a time coming to himself, threw himself upon him and embraced him, clipping him to his bosom and rejoicing in him with exceeding joy and extreme gladness. His mother and sisters heard this; so they came in and seeing the Prince, fell upon him, kissing him and weeping, and joying with surpassing joyance. Then they questioned him of his case; so he told them all that had passed from first to last, and his father said to him, "Praised be Allah for thy safety, O coolth of my eyes and core of my heart!" Then the King bade hold high festival, and the glad tidings flew through the city. So they beat drums and cymbals and, doffing the weed of mourning, they donned the gay garb of gladness and decorated the streets and markets; whilst the folk vied one with other who should be the first to give the King joy, and the King proclaimed a general pardon, and opening the prisons released those who were therein prisoned. Moreover, he made banquets for the people, with great abundance of eating and drinking, for seven days and nights, and all creatures were gladsoonest; and he took horse with his son and rode out with him, that the folk might see him and rejoice. After awhile the Prince asked about the maker of the horse, saying, "O my father, what hath fortune done with him?" and the King answered, "Allah never bless him nor the hour wherein I set eyes on him! For he was the cause of thy separation from us, O my son, and he hath lain in gaol since the day of thy disappearance." Then the King bade release him from prison, and sending for him, invested him in a dress of satisfaction and entreated him with the utmost favour and munificence, save that he would not give him his daughter to wife; whereat the Sage raged with sore rage and repented of that which he had done, knowing that the Prince had secured the secret of the steed and the manner of its motion. Moreover, the King said to his son, "I reckon thou wilt do well not to go near the horse henceforth and more especially not to mount it after this day; for thou knowest not its properties, and belike thou art in error about it." Now the Prince had told his father of his adventure with the King of Sana'a and his daughter and he said, "Had the King intended to kill thee, he had done so; but thine hour was not yet come." When the rejoicings were at an end, the people returned to their places and the King and his son to the palace, where they sat down and fell to eating and drinking and making merry. Now the King had a handsome handmaiden who was skilled in playing the lute; so she took it and began to sweep the strings and sing thereto before the King and his son of separation of lovers, and she chanted the following verses:—

¹ The well-known capital of Al-Yaman, a true Arabia Felix, a Paradise inhabited by demons in the shape of Turkish soldiery and Arab caterans. According to Moslem writers, Sana'a was founded by Shem, son of Noah, who, wandering southward with his posterity after his father's death, and finding the site delightful, dug a well and founded the citadel Ghamdán, which afterwards contained a Museon Camite rivaling (or attempting to rival) the Meccan Ka'abah. The builder was Surahbál who, says M. C. de Perceval, coloured its four faces red, white, golden, and green; the central quadrangle had seven stories (the planets) each forty cubits high, and the lowest was a marble hall ceiling'd with a single slab. At the four corners stood hollow lions through whose mouths the winds roared. This palatial citadel-temple was destroyed by order of Caliph Omar. The city's ancient name was A. ul or Uzal, whom some identify with one of the thirteen sons of Joktan (Gen. ix, xi. 27): it took its present name from the Ethiopian conquerors (they say) who, seeing it for the first time, cried, "Hazá Sana'ah!" meaning in their tongue, this is commodious, etc. I may note that the word is Kisawahili (Zanzibarian) e.g., "Yámbo sáná —is the state good?" Sana'a was the capital of the Tabáhi'ah or Tobba Kings who judaized; and the Abyssinians with their Negush made it Christian while the Persians under Anushirwán converted it to Guebrism. It is now easily visited, but to little purpose; excursions in the neighbourhood being deadly dangerous. Moreover, the Turkish garrison would probably murder a stranger who sympathised with the Arabs, and the Arabs kill one who took part with their hated and hateful conquerors. The late Mr. Shapira of Jerusalem declared that he had visited it and Jews have great advantages in such travel. But his friends doubted him.

Deem not that absence breeds in me aught of forgetfulness; * What should remember I did you fro' my remembrance wane?

Time dies but never dies the fondest love for you we bear; * And in your love I'll die and in your love I'll arise again.¹

When the Prince heard these verses the fires of longing flamed up in his heart and pine and passion redoubled upon him. Grief and regret were sore upon him and his bowels yearned in him for love of the King's daughter of Sana'a; so he rose forthright and, escaping his father's notice, went forth the palace to the horse and mounting it, turned the pin of ascent, whereupon bird-like it flew with him high in air and soared towards the upper regions of the sky. In early morning his father missed him and going up to the pinnacle of the palace, in great concern, saw his son rising into the firmament; whereat he was sore afflicted and repented in all penitence that he had not taken the horse and hidden it; and he said to himself, "By Allah, if but my son return to me, I will destroy the horse, that my heart may be at rest concerning my son." And he fell again to weeping and bewailing himself—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-fourth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King again fell to weeping and bewailing himself for his son. Such was his case; but as regards the Prince, he ceased not flying on through air till he came to the city of Sana'a and alighted on the roof as before. Then he crept down stealthily, and finding the eunuch asleep, as of wont, raised the curtain and went on little by little till he came to the door of the Princess's alcove²-chamber and stopped to listen; when, lo! he heard her shedding plenteous tears and reciting verses, whilst her women slept round her. Presently, overhearing her weeping and wailing, quoth they, "O our mistress, why wilt thou mourn

1 The Bresl. Edit. (iii. 317) prints three vile errors in four lines.

2 Alcove is a corruption of the Arab. Al-Kut'bah (the dome) through Span. and Port.

for one who mourneth not for thee?" Quoth she, "O ye little of wit, is he for whom I mourn of those who forget or who are forgotten?" And she fell again to wailing and weeping till sleep overcame her. Hereat the Prince's heart melted for her and his gall-bladder was like to burst, so he entered, and seeing her lying asleep without covering,¹ touched her with his hand; whereupon she opened her eyes and espied him standing by her. Said he, "Why all this crying and mourning?" And when she knew him, she threw herself upon him, and took him around the neck and kissed him and answered, "For thy sake and because of my separation from thee." Said he, "O my lady, I have been made desolate by thee all this long time!" But she replied, "'Tis thou who hast desolated me; and hadst thou tarried longer I had surely died!" Rejoined he, "O my lady, what thinkest thou of my case with thy father and how he dealt with me? Were it not for my love of thee, O temptation and seduction of the Three Worlds, I had certainly slain him and made him a warning to all beholders; but, even as I love thee, so I love him for thy sake." Quoth she, "How couldst thou leave me; can my life be sweet to me after thee?" Quoth he, "Let what hath happened suffice: I am now hungry and thirsty." So she bade her maidens make ready meat and drink, and they sat eating and drinking and conversing till night was well-nigh ended; and when day broke he rose to take leave of her and depart ere the eunuch should awake. Shams al-Nahar asked him, "Whither goest thou?" and he answered, "To my father's house, and I plight thee my troth that I will come to thee once in every week." But she wept and said, "I conjure thee, by Allah the Almighty, take me with thee whereso thou wendest and make me not taste anew the bitter-gourd² of separation from thee." Quoth he, "Wilt thou indeed go with me?" and quoth she, "Yes." "Then," said he, "arise that we depart." So she rose forthright, and going to a chest, arrayed herself in what was richest and dearest to her of her trinkets of gold and jewels of price, and she fared forth, her handmaids recking naught. So he carried her up to the roof of the palace and mounting the ebony horse, took her up behind him and made her fast to himself, binding her with strong bonds; after which he turned the shoulder-pin of ascent, and the horse rose with him high in air. When her slave-women saw this, they shrieked aloud and told her father and mother, who in hot haste ran to the palace-roof, and looking up, saw the magical horse flying away with the Prince and Princess. At this the King was troubled with ever-increasing trouble, and cried out, saying, "O King's son, I conjure thee, by Allah, have ruth on me and my wife, and bereave us not of our daughter!" The Prince made him no reply; but, thinking in himself that the maiden repented of leaving father and mother, asked her, "O ravishment of the age, say me, wilt thou that I restore thee to thy mother and father?" whereupon she answered, "By Allah, O my lord, that is not my desire: my only wish is to be with thee, wherever thou art; for I am distracted by the love of thee from all else, even from my father and mother." Hearing these words the Prince joyed with great joy, and made the horse fly and fare softly with them, so as not to disquiet her; nor did they stay their flight till they came in sight of a green meadow, wherein was a spring of running water. Here they alighted and ate and drank; after which the Prince took horse again and set her behind him, binding her in his fear for her safety; after which they fared on till they came in sight of his father's capital. At this the Prince was filled with joy and bethought himself to show his beloved the seat of his dominion and his father's power and dignity, and give her to know that it was greater than that of her sire. So he set her down in one of his father's gardens without the city where his parent was wont to take his pleasure, and carrying her into a domed summer-house there prepared for the King, left the ebony horse at the door and charged the damsel keep watch over it, saying, "Sit here till my messenger come to thee, for I go now to my father to make ready a palace for thee and show thee my royal estate." She was delighted when she heard these words and said to him, "Do as thou wilt";—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

¹ Easterns as a rule sleep with head and limbs covered by a sheet or in cold weather a blanket. The practice is doubtless hygienic, defending the body from draughts at a time when the pores are open; but Europeans find it hard to adopt; it seems to stop their breathing. Another excellent practice in the East, and indeed amongst barbarians and savages generally, is training children to sleep with mouths shut; in after life they never snore and in malarious lands they do not require Outram's "fever-guard," a swathe of muslin over the mouth. Mr. Catlin thought so highly of the "shut mouth" that he made it the subject of a book.

² Arab. "Hanzal" = coloquintida, an article often mentioned by Arabs in verse and prose; the bright-coloured little gourd attracts every eye by its golden glance when travelling over the brown-yellow waste of sand and clay. A favourite purgative (enough for a horse) is made by filling the inside with sour milk, which is drunk after a night's soaking: it is as active as the croton-nut of the Gold Coast.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the maiden was delighted when she heard these words and said to him, "Do as thou wilt"; for she thereby understood that she should not enter the city but with due honour and worship as became her rank. Then the Prince left her and betook himself to the palace of the King his father, who rejoiced in his return and met him and welcomed him; and the Prince said to him, "Know that I have brought with me the King's daughter of whom I told thee; and have left her without the city in such a garden, and come to tell thee that thou mayst make ready the procession of estate and go forth to meet her and show her thy royal dignity and troops and guards." Answered the King, "With joy and gladness"; and straightway bade decorate the town with the goodliest adornment. Then he took horse and rode out in all magnificence and majesty, he and his host, high officers and household, with drums and kettle-drums, fifes and claxions and all manner instruments; whilst the Prince drew forth of his treasures jewelry and apparel and what else of the things which Kings hoard and made a rare display of wealth and splendour; moreover, he got ready for the Princess a canopied litter of brocades, green, red and yellow, wherein he set Indian and Greek and Abyssinian slave-girls. Then he left the litter and those who were therein and preceded them to the pavilion where he had set her down; and searched but found naught, neither Princess nor horse. When he saw this, he beat his face and rent his raiment and began to wander round about the garden, as he had lost his wits; after which he came to his senses and said to himself, "How could she have gotten at the secret of this horse, seeing I told her nothing thereof? Maybe the Persian sage who made the horse hath chanced upon her and stolen her away, in revenge for my father's treatment of him." Then he sought the guardians of the garden and asked them if they had seen any pass the precincts; and said, "Hath any one come in here? Tell me the truth and the whole truth or I will at once strike off your heads." They were terrified by his threats; but they answered with one voice, "We have seen no man enter save the Persian sage, who came to gather healing herbs." So the Prince was certified that it was indeed he that had taken away the maiden—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-sixth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Prince heard their answer, he was certified that the Sage had taken away the maiden and he abode confounded and perplexed concerning his case. And he was abashed before the folk and turning to his sire, told him what had happened and said to him, "Take the troops and march them back to the city. As for me, I will never return till I have cleared up this affair." When the King heard this, he wept and beat his breast and said to him, "O my son, calm thy choler and master thy chagrin and come home with us, and look what King's daughter thou wouldst fain have, that I may marry thee to her." But the Prince paid no heed to his words and farewelling him departed, whilst the King returned to the city and their joy was changed into sore annoy. Now, as Destiny issued her decree, when the Prince left the Princess in the garden-house and betook himself to his father's palace for the ordering of his affair, the Persian entered the garden to pluck certain simples and scenting the sweet savour of musk and perfumes that exhaled from the Princess and impregnated the whole place, followed it till he came to the pavilion, and saw standing at the door the horse which he had made with his own hands. His heart was filled with joy and gladness, for he had bemoaned its loss much since it had gone out of his hand: so he went up to it and examining its every part, found it whole and sound; whereupon he was about to mount and ride away, when he bethought himself and said, "Needs must I first look what the Prince hath brought and left here with the horse." So he entered the pavilion and seeing the Princess sitting there, as she were the sun shining sheen in the sky serene, knew her at the first glance to be some high-born lady, and doubted not but the Prince had brought her thither on the horse and left her in the pavilion, whilst he went to the city, to make ready for her entry in state procession with all splendour. Then he went up to her and kissed earth between her hands, whereupon she raised her eyes to him and, finding him exceedingly foul of face and favour, asked, "Who art thou?" and he answered, "O my lady, I am a messenger sent by the Prince, who hath bidden me bring thee to another pleasure nearer the city; for that my lady the Queen cannot walk so far and is unwilling, of her joy in thee, that another should forestall her with thee." Quoth she, "Where is the Prince?" and quoth the Persian, "He is in the city, with his sire, and forthwith he shall come for thee in great state." Said she, "O thou! say me, could he find none handsomer to send to me?" whereat loud laughed the Sage and said, "Yea, verily, he hath not a Mameluke as ugly as I am; but, O my lady, let not the ill-favour of my face and the foulness of my form deceive thee.

Hadst thou profited of me as hath the Prince, v̄rily thou wouldst praise my affair. Indeed, he chose me as his messenger to thee, because of my uncomeliness and loathsomeness in his jealous love of thee: else hath he Mamelukes and negro slaves, pages, eunuchs and attendants out of number, each goodlier than other." Whenas she heard this, it commended itself to her reason and she believed him; so she rose forthright;—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-seventh Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Persian sage acquainted the Princess with the case of the King's son, she believed him; so she rose forthright; and, putting her hand in his, said, "O my father, what hast thou brought me to ride?" He replied, "O my lady, thou shalt ride the horse thou camest on"; and she, "I cannot ride it by myself." Whereupon he smiled and knew that he was her master and said, "I will ride with thee myself." So he mounted and taking her up behind him bound her to himself with firm bonds while she knew not what he would with her. Then he turned the ascent-pin, whereupon the belly of the horse became full of wind and it swayed to and fro like a wave of the sea, and rose with them high in air nor slackened in its flight till it was out of sight of the city. Now when Shams al-Nahar saw this, she asked him, "Ho thou! what is become of that thou toldest me anent my Prince, making me believe that he sent thee to me?" Answered the Persian, "Allah damn the Prince! he is a mean and skin-flint knave." She cried, "Woe to thee! How darest thou disobey thy lord's commandment?" Whereto the Persian replied, "He is no lord of mine: knowest thou who I am?" Rejoined the Princess, "I know nothing of thee save what thou toldest me"; and retorted he, "What I told thee was a trick of mine against thee and the King's son: I have long lamented the loss of this horse which is under us; for I constructed it and made myself master of it. But now I have gotten firm hold of it and of thee too, and I will burn his heart even as he hath burnt mine; nor shall he ever have the horse again; no, never! So be of good cheer and keep thine eyes cool and clear: for I can be of more use to thee than he; and I am generous as I am wealthy; my servants and slaves shall obey thee as their mistress; I will robe thee in finest raiment, and thine every wish shall be at thy will." When she heard this, she buffeted her face and cried out, saying, "Ah, well away! I have not won my beloved and I have lost my father and mother!" And she wept bitter tears over what had befallen her, whilst the Sage fared on with her, without ceasing, till he came to the land of the Greeks¹ and alighted in a verdant mead abounding in streams and trees. Now this meadow lay near a city wherein was a King of high puissance, and it chanced that he went forth that day to hunt and divert himself. As he passed by the prairie, he saw the Persian standing there, with the damsel and the horse by his side; and, before the Sage was ware, the King's slaves fell upon him and carried him and the lady and the horse to their master who, noting the foulness of the man's favour and his loathsomeness and the beauty of the girl and her loveliness, said, "O my lady, what kin is this oldster to thee?" The Persian made haste to reply, saying, "She is my wife and the daughter of my father's brother." But the lady at once gave him the lie and said, "O King, by Allah, I know him not, nor is he my husband; nay, he is a wicked magician who hath stolen me away by force and fraud." Thereupon the King bade bastinado the Persian and they beat him till he was well-nigh dead; after which the King commanded to carry him to the city and cast him into jail; and, taking from him the damsel and the ebony horse (though he knew not its properties nor the secret of its motion), set the girl in his seraglio and the horse amongst his hoards. Such was the case with the Sage and the lady; but as regards Prince Kamar al-Akmar, he garbed himself in travelling gear and taking what he needed of money, set out tracking their trail in most sorry plight; and journeyed from country to country and city to city seeking the Princess and enquiring after the ebony horse, whilst all who heard him marvelled at him and deemed his talk extravagant. Thus he continued doing a long while; but, for all his quest and enquiry, he could hit on no news of her. At last he came to her father's city of Sana'a and there asked for her, but could get no tidings of her and found her father mourning her loss. So he turned back and made for the land of the Greeks, continuing to enquire concerning the twain as he went—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

1 The Bresl Edit., iii. 354, sends him to the "land of Sin" (China).

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King's son made for the land of the Greeks, continuing to enquire concerning the two as he went along, till, as chance would have it, he alighted at a certain Khan and saw a company of merchants sitting at talk. So he sat down near them and heard one say, "O my friends, I lately witnessed a wonder of wonders." They asked, "What was that?" And he answered, "I was visiting such a district in such a city (naming the city wherein was the Princess), and I heard its people chatting of a strange thing which had lately befallen. It was that their King went out one day hunting and coursing with a company of his courtiers and the lords of his realm; and, issuing from the city, they came to a green meadow where they espied an old man standing, with a woman sitting hard by a horse of ebony. The man was foulest-foul of face and loathly of form, but the woman was a marvel of beauty and loveliness and elegance and perfect grace; and as for the wooden horse, it was a miracle, never saw eyes aught goodlier than it nor more gracious than its make." Asked the others, "And what did the King with them?" and the merchant answered, "As for the man the King seized him and questioned him of the damsel, and he pretended that she was his wife and the daughter of his paternal uncle; but she gave him the lie forthright and declared that he was a sorcerer and a villain. So the King took her from the old man and bade beat him and cast him into the trunk-house. As for the ebony horse, I know not what became of it." When the Prince heard these words, he drew near to the merchant and began questioning him discreetly and courteously touching the name of the city and of its King; which, when he knew, he passed the night full of joy. And as soon as dawned the day he set out and travelled sans surcease till he reached that city; but, when he would have entered, the gate-keepers laid hands on him that they might bring him before the King to question him of his condition and the craft in which he was skilled and the cause of his coming thither—such being the usage and custom of their ruler. Now it was supper-time when he entered the city, and it was then impossible to go in to the King or take counsel with him respecting the stranger. So the guards carried him to the jail, thinking to lay him by the heels there for the night; but when the warders saw his beauty and loveliness they could not find it in their hearts to imprison him; they made him sit with them without the walls; and, when food came to them, he ate with them what sufficed him. As soon as they had made an end of eating, they turned to the Prince and said, "What countryman art thou?" "I come from Fars," answered he, "the land of the Chosroës." When they heard this they laughed, and one of them said, "O Chosroân,¹ I have heard the talk of men and their histories and I have looked into their conditions; but never saw I or heard I a bigger liar than the Chosroân which is with us in the jail." Quoth another, "And never did I see aught fouler than his favour or more hideous than his visnomy." Asked the Prince, "What have ye seen of his lying?" and they answereth, "He pretendeth that he is one of the wise! Now the King came upon him, as he went a-hunting, and found with him a most beautiful woman and a horse of the blackest ebony, never saw I a handsomer. As for the damsel, she is with the King, who is enamoured of her and would fain marry her; but she is mad, and were this man a leach as he claimeth to be, he would have healed her, for the King doth his utmost to discover a cure for her case and a remedy for her disease, and this whole year past hath he spent treasures upon physicians and astrologers on her account; but none can avail to cure her. As for the horse it is in the royal hoard-house, and the ugly man is here with us in prison; and as soon as night falleth, he weepeth and bemoaneth himself and will not let us sleep."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the warders had recounted the case of the Persian egromancer they held in prison and his weeping and wailing, the Prince at once devised a device whereby he might compass his desire; and presently the guards of the gate, being minded to sleep, led him into the jail and locked the door. So he overheard the Persian weeping and bemoaning himself in his own tongue, and saying, "Alack, and alas for my sin that I sinned against myself and against the King's son in that which I did with the damsel; for I neither left her nor won my will of her! All this cometh of my lack of sense, in that ¹ Arab. "Yâ Kisrawî!" = O subject of the Kisrá or Chosroë; the latter explained in vol. i. night viii. "Fars" is the origin of "Persia"; and there is a hit at the prodigious lying of the modern race, whose forefathers were so famous as truth-tellers. "I am a Persian, but I am not lying now," is a phrase familiar to every traveller.

I sought for myself that which I deserved not and which befitted not the like of me; for whose seeketh what suiteth him not at all, falleth with the like of my fall." Now when the King's son heard this, he accosted him in Persian, saying, "How long will this weeping and wailing last? Say me, thinkest thou that hath befallen thee that which never befell other than thou?" Now when the Persian heard this he made friends with him and began to complain to him of his case and misfortunes. And as soon as the morning morrowed, the warders took the Prince and carried him before their King, informing him that he had entered the city on the previous night at a time when audience was impossible. Quoth the King to the Prince, "Whence comest thou and what is thy name and trade and why hast thou travelled hither?" He replied, "As to my name I am called in Persian Harjah¹; as to my country I come from the land of Fars; and I am of the men of art and especially of the art of medicine, and healing the sick and those whom the Jinns drive mad. For this I go round about all countries and cities, to profit by adding knowledge to my knowledge, and whenever I see a patient I heal him and this is my craft." Now when the King heard this he rejoiced with exceeding joy and said, "O excellent Sage, thou hast indeed come to us at a time when we need thee." Then he acquainted him with the case of the Princess, adding, "If thou cure her and recover her from her madness, thou shalt have of me everything thou seekest." Replied the Prince, "Allah save and favour the King; describe to me all thou hast seen of her insanity and tell me how long it is since the access attacked her; also how thou camest by her and by the horse and the Sage." So the King told him the whole story, from first to last, adding "The Sage is in gaol." Quoth the Prince, "O auspicious King, and what hast thou done with the horse?" Quoth the King, "O youth, it is with me yet, laid up in one of my treasure-chambers," whereupon said the Prince within himself, "The best thing I can do is first to see the horse and assure myself of its condition. If it be whole and sound, all will be well and end well; but, if its motor-works be destroyed, I must find some other way of delivering ¹ There is no such name: perhaps it is a clerical error for "Har jāh" = (a man of) any place. I know an Englishman who called himself "Mirza Abdullah-i-Hichmakāni" = Master Abdullah of Nowhere; [Sir R. F. Burton himself].

² The Bres. Edit. (loc. cit.) gives a comical description of the Prince assuming the dress of an astrologer-doctor, clapping an old book under his arm, fumbling a rosary of beads, enlarging his turband, lengthening his sleeves, and blackening his eyelids with antimony. Here, however, it would be out of place. Very comical also is the way in which he pretends to cure the maniac by "muttering unknown words, blowing in her face, biting her ear," etc.

my beloved." Thereupon he turned to the King and said to him, "O King, I must see the horse in question; haply I may find in it somewhat that will serve me for the recovery of the damsel." "With all my heart," replied the King, and taking him by the hand, showed him into the place where the horse was. The Prince went round about it, examining its condition, and found it whole and sound, whereat he rejoiced greatly and said to the King, "Allah save and exalt the King! I would fain go in to the damsel, that I may see how it is with her; for I hope in Allah to heal her by my healing hand through means of the horse." Then he bade them take care of the horse and the King carried him to the Princess's apartment, where her lover found her wringing her hands, and writhing and beating herself against the ground, and tearing her garments to tatters as was her wont; but there was no madness of Jinn in her, and she did this but that none might approach her. When the Prince saw her thus, he said to her, "No harm shall betide thee, O ravishment of the three worlds"; and went on to soothe her and speak her fair, till he managed to whisper, "I am Kamar al-Akmar"; whereupon she cried out with a loud cry and fell down fainting for excess of joy; but the King thought this was epilepsy¹ brought on by her fear of him, and by her suddenly being startled. Then the Prince put his mouth to her ear and said to her, "O Shams al-Nahar, O seduction of the universe, have a care for thy life and mine and be patient and constant; for this our position needeth sufferance and skilful contrivance to make shift for our delivery from this tyrannical King. My first move will be now to go out to him and tell him that thou art possessed of a Jinn and hence thy madness; but that I will engage to heal thee and drive away the evil spirit, if he will at once unbind thy bonds. So when he cometh in to thee, do thou speak him smooth words that he may think I have cured thee, and all will be done for us as we desire." Quoth she, "Hearkening and obedience"; and he went out to the King in joy and gladness, and said to him, "O august King, I have, by thy good fortune, discovered her disease and its remedy, and have cured her for thee. So now do thou go in to her and speak her softly and treat her kindly, and promise her what may please her; so shall all thou desirest of her be accomplished to thee."—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased to say her permitted say.

¹ Arab "Sar'a" = falling sickness. Here again we have in all its simplicity the old nursery idea of "possession" by evil spirits.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Seventieth Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that when the Prince feigned himself a leach and went in to the damsel and made himself known to her and told her how he purposed to deliver her, she cried, "Hearkening and obedience!" He then fared forth from her and sought the King and said, "Go thou in to her and speak her softly and promise her what may please her; so shall all thou desirest of her be accomplished to thee." Thereupon the King went in to her, and when she saw him she rose and, kissing ground before him, bade him welcome and said, "I admire how thou hast come to visit thy handmaid this day"; whereat he was ready to fly for joy and bade the waiting-women and the eunuchs attend her and carry her to the Hammam and make ready for her dresses and adornment. So they went in to her and saluted her, and she returned their salams with the goodliest language and after the pleasantest fashion; whereupon they clad her in royal apparel, and claspings a collar of jewels about her neck, carried her to the bath and served her there. Then they brought her forth, as she were the full moon; and when she came into the King's presence she saluted him and kissed ground before him; whereupon he joyed in her with joy exceeding and said to the Prince, "O Sage, O philosopher, all this is of thy blessing. Allah increase to us the benefit of thy healing breath¹!" The Prince replied, "O King, for the completion of her cure it behoveth that thou go forth, thou and all thy troops and guards, to the place where thou foundest her, not forgetting the beast of black wood which was with her, for therein is a devil; and unless I exorcise him he will return to her and afflict her at the head of every month." "With love and gladness," cried the King, "O thou Prince of all philosophers and most learned of all who see the light of day." Then he brought out the ebony horse to the meadow in question, and rode thither with all his troops and the Princess, little weeting the purpose of the Prince. Now when they came to the appointed place the Prince, still habited as a leach, bade them set

1 Arab. "Nafahát" = breathings, benefits, the Heb. Neshamah opp. to Nephesh (soul) and Ruach (spirit). Healing by the breath is a popular idea throughout the East and not unknown to Western Magnetists and Mesmerists. The miraculous cures of the Messiah were, according to Moslems, mostly performed by aspiration. They hold that in the days of Isa phisic had reached its highest development, and thus his miracles were mostly miracles of medicine; whereas, in Mohammed's time, eloquence had attained its climax, and accordingly his miracles were those of eloquence, as shown in the Koran and Ahádís.

the Princess and the steed as far as eye could reach from the King and his troops, and said to him, "With thy leave and at thy word, I will now proceed to the fumigations and conjurations, and here imprison the adversary of mankind that he may never more return to her. After this I shall mount this wooden horse which seemeth to be made of ebony, and take the damsel up behind me; whereupon it will shake and sway to and fro and fare forwards till it come to thee, when the affair will be at an end; and after this thou mayst do with her as thou wilt." When the King heard his words he rejoiced with extreme joy; so the Prince mounted the horse, and taking the damsel up behind him, whilst the King and his troops watched him, bound her fast to him. Then he turned the ascending-pin and the horse took flight and soared with them high in air, till they disappeared from every eye. After this the King abode half the day, expecting their return, but they returned not. So when he despaired of them, repenting him greatly of that which he had done and grieving sore for the loss of the damsel, he went back to the city with his troops. He then sent for the Persian who was in prison, and said to him, "O thou traitor, O thou villain, why didst thou hide from me the mystery of the ebony horse? And now a sharper hath come to me and hath carried it off, together with a slave-girl whose ornaments are worth a mint of money, and I shall never see anyone or anything of them again!" So the Persian related to him all his past, first and last, and the King was seized with a fit of fury which well-nigh ended his life. He shut himself up in his palace for a while, mourning and afflicted; but at last his Wazirs came in to him and applied themselves to comfort him, saying, "Verily, he who took the damsel is an enchanter, and praised be Allah, who hath delivered thee from his craft and sorcery!" And they ceased not from him till he was comforted for her loss. Thus far concerning the King; but as for the Prince, he continued his career towards his father's capital in joy and cheer and stayed not till he alighted on his own palace, where he set the lady in safety; after which he went in to his father and mother and saluted them and acquainted them with her coming, whereat they were filled with solace and gladness. Then he spread great banquets for the towns-folk—And Shahrazad perceived the dawn of day and ceased saying her permitted say.

Now when it was the Three Hundred and Seventy-first Night,

She said, It hath reached me, O auspicious King, that the King's son spread great banquets for the towns-folk and they held high festival a whole month, at the end of which time he went in to the Princess and they took their joy each of other with exceeding joy. But his father brake the ebony horse in pieces and destroyed its mechanism for flight; moreover, the Prince wrote a letter to the Princess's father, advising him of all that had befallen her and informing him how she was now married to him and in all health and happiness, and sent it by a messenger, together with costly presents and curious rarities. And when the messenger arrived at the city which was Sana'a, and delivered the letter and the presents to the King, he read the missive and rejoiced greatly thereat and accepted the presents, honouring and rewarding the bearer handsomely. Moreover, he forwarded rich gifts to his son-in-law by the same messenger, who returned to his master and acquainted him with what had passed; whereat he was much cheered. And after this the Prince wrote a letter every year to his father-in-law and sent him presents till in course of time his sire King Sabur deceased and he reigned in his stead, ruling justly over his lieges and bearing himself well and righteously towards them, so that the land submitted to him and his subjects did him loyal service; and Kamar al-Akmar and his wife Shams al-Nahar abode in the enjoyment of all satisfaction and solace of life, till there came to them the Destroyer of delights and Sunderer of societies; the Plunderer of palaces, the Caterer for cemeteries and the Garnerer of graves. And now glory be to the Living One who dieth not and in whose hand is the dominion of the worlds visible and invisible! Moreover, I have heard tell the tale of

